^ Portfolio turnover rate excludes derivatives, if any.

(e) Net investment income (loss) per share is based on average shares outstanding.

(f) Expenses do not include the expenses of the underlying funds ("indirect expenses"), if applicable.

(aa) Includes income resulting from a special dividend. Without this dividend, the ratios for each class would have been 0.20% lower.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were information technology, consumer discretionary, health care, communication services and industrials.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were Apple, Inc., Amazon.com, Inc., Microsoft Corp., Tesla, Inc. and NVIDIA Corp.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were energy, financials, real estate and utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were Exxon Mobil Corp., Wells Fargo & Co., The Boeing Co., AT&T, Inc. and United Technologies Corp.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

EQ/COMMON STOCK INDEX PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,243.80	$3.86
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.69	3.48
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,244.00	3.86
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.69	3.48

 Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA and Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.68% and 0.68%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).*

Weighted Average Coupon (%)	2.37
Weighted Average Effective Duration (Years)*	4.18
Weighted Average Rating	AA3

* Effective duration is a measure of the price sensitivity of the Portfolio to interest rate movements, taking into account specific features of the securities in which it invests.

 Weighted Average Rating has been provided by the Investment Sub-Adviser. A credit rating is an assessment provided by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization (NRSRO) of the creditworthiness of an issuer with respect to debt obligations, including specific securities, money market instruments or other debts. Ratings are measured on a scale that generally ranges from AAA (highest) to D (lowest); ratings are subject to change without notice.

Asset Class Overview

Just one year ago, economists were predicting a continuation of the slow expansion that we had been seeing in years past. Instead, 2020 brought a global pandemic that roiled markets and devastated global economies. In addition, in the U.S. specifically, investors had to digest the anticipation and subsequent realization of a contested presidential election as well as the repercussions of a divided congress.

In response to market turmoil brought about by the pandemic, the Federal Reserve (Fed), who in the beginning of the year was comfortable holding rates steady at 1.50%-1.75% through 2021, first cut rates off-cycle by 50 basis points (bps), before following up with a 100 bps cut to a zero lower bound in March. Due to the all but non-existent liquidity, the Fed announced 12 different programs to enhance market liquidity, including unlimited quantitative easing. In addition, Congress passed a historic $2 trillion stimulus package with provisions aimed at helping American workers, small businesses and industries grappling with the economic disruption. The massive amounts of aid provided by both the Fed and Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020.

Risk assets rallied throughout the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly and extending gains through December. Ten year treasury yields dropped to a historic low, but by the end of the year had climbed back up to 91 bps. Corporate debt markets widened to levels we had not seen since the financial crisis in the first quarter and spent the year slowly grinding back to just above January tights. Corporate new issuance reached record levels this year as borrowers took advantage of the low rates environment. By May, $1 trillion worth of debt sales had been brought to the market – far quicker than the previous record of $1 trillion by August (2017). Overall

EQ/CORE BOND INDEX PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

U.S. Corporate issuance (both investment grade and high yield) for the year came to $2.29 trillion, a 58% increase year over year from 2019.

Portfolio Highlights

Main contributors to Portfolio performance included the decrease in treasury yields, the widening and subsequent tightening of bond spreads, as well as the Federal Reserve's cut of interest rates to a zero lower bound in response to March's liquidity crisis. In addition, record amounts of new issuance and the premium that historically often accompanies the new issue contributed positively to funds holding corporate bonds.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 14.10% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the MSCI Emerging Markets (Gross Dividends) IndexSM, which returned 18.69% over the same period.

The following commentary describes key factors (such as stock selection and sector allocation decisions) that helped or hurt the Portfolio's performance relative to the MSCI Emerging Markets Index.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Strong stock selection in the financials and consumer discretionary sectors contributed to relative performance over the period.
- Overweighting BYD Company Limited Class H (consumer discretionary) and Micro-Star International (IT) and underweighting Alibaba Group Holdings (consumer discretionary) contributed to the Portfolio's overall performance.
- Underweighting the energy, real estate and utilities sectors and overweighting the information technology sector contributed to relative performance.
- The Portfolio's Chinese-based holdings performed nearly three times better than the average Chinese company within the benchmark.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Sector allocation was an overall detractor from the Portfolio for the year, including overweighting the financials sector and underweighting the information technology, consumer discretionary and communication services sectors.
- Underweighting Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co. (IT) and Tencent Holdings Ltd. (communication services), which were strong performers for the benchmark, detracted from relative performance.
- The Portfolio's relative overweight to Brazilian equities and Indonesian equities detracted from performance during the year.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — EARNEST Partners, LLC

As a function of a bottom up investment process, at year end the Portfolio had a relative overweight to Latin America and South Africa and a relative underweight to Asia and India. From a sector perspective, the Portfolio had a relative overweight to energy, financials and information technology. The Portfolio had a relative underweight to communication services, consumer discretionary, consumer staples, health care, industrials, materials, real estate and utilities.

EQ/EMERGING MARKETS EQUITY PLUS PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

As a bottom-up, fundamental manager, market and economic forecasts are not an integral part of our investment process. We continue to focus on owning fundamentally sound companies that we believe are well capitalized and well positioned to take market share from weaker competitors. These higher quality companies have outperformed historically, and we believe will outperform over the longer term.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,327.80	$7.02
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.10	6.09
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,329.00	5.56
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.36	4.82

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.20% and 0.95%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

EQ/EQUITY 500 INDEX PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- By design, security selection was the main driver of results.
- Contributors to performance included positive security selection in the information technology, industrials and communication services sectors, specifically among the software & services, capital goods, and media & entertainment names.

- Among individual holdings in the software & services group, the out-of-benchmark position in cloud-based communications software provider Twilio was the top contributors. Shares of Twilio, Inc. surged over 208% over the year, fueled by broader market momentum as the heightened demand for digital communication services continued to expand and accelerate new customer adoption. Shares were further boosted amid positive investor sentiment after the company acquired Segment, a customer data infrastructure company. The acquisition will serve to help Twilio accelerate its move up the stack to make the customer experience seamless from end-to-end.
- The largest contributor to relative performance over the year was the out-of-benchmark position in solar panel installation company Vivint Solar, Inc.. Shares soared roughly 463%, first accelerating on meaningful key channel growth within the company's inside-sales, retail, and homebuilder arms. Shares subsequently surged on news of the company's agreement to be purchased by residential solar energy systems company Sunrun, Inc. for roughly $3.2 billion, including debt. The deal is expected to result in cost synergies and help Sunrun's position versus rivals.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The utilities sector was the only sector to post a modest negative return over the reporting period.
- Among the utilities names, an overweight position in transmission and distribution electric utility company Edison International hampered performance. Shares declined over the period amid significant legal and financial troubles. During the year, Edison was faced with growing liabilities for major wildfires in the state of California that were the fault of Edison's equipment. Coronavirus related pressures further weighed on the shares.
- On an individual security basis, the two largest detractors from performance over the reporting period were the overweight positions in industrial conglomerate General Electric Co. and cruise line Royal Caribbean Cruises Ltd. The stock of General Electric dropped over the year, falling most significantly in early March after management announced that the coronavirus would pressure earnings and free cash flow for the near future. General Electric called the COVID-19 outbreak an "evolving variable," particularly for its aviation segment, which struggled because the pandemic halted air travel and shut down manufacturing operations in many parts of the world. Shares of Royal Caribbean fell almost -72% during the period as operators cancelled itineraries for the foreseeable future due to the coronavirus pandemic, particularly in Europe and the U.S, the largest markets for their cruises.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,279.60	$4.98
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.76	4.42
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,281.10	3.55
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.02	3.15
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.87% and 0.62%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 6.73% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/First Trust Moderate Growth Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Year Corporate Bond Index, which returned 14.05%, 18.40% and 9.75%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- During the performance period, all asset classes included in the strategic allocation had positive returns with small cap U.S. stocks posting the highest total return, followed by U.S. large cap stocks.
- The Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Corporate Bond Index, the largest strategic allocation in the fund (40%), was a strong performer during the year with a 9.75% total return as lower yields across the treasury curve boosted bond prices.
- Relative performance was helped by the Portfolio's allocation to the iShares Core MSCI EAFE ETF, which slightly outperformed its benchmark.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Performance was hurt during the year by the reduction in equity exposure per the volatility control mandate. Overall, Portfolio volatility and equity asset class volatility were dramatically lowered by the hedging program during the year; however, the hedging process reduced the equity exposure of the Portfolio which resulted in lower total returns for the year.
- During the first quarter, the volatility overlay process added significant relative value as short positions entered to reduce overall Portfolio volatility lowered the Portfolio's overall exposure to a negative returning asset class. As the equity markets began to recover in the second and third quarters, eventually reaching all-time highs in the fourth quarter, the lower equity exposure resulting from the volatility control process dragged on relative Portfolio returns.
- Relative performance was also hindered slightly by the underperformance of the Vanguard Intermediate-Term Corporate Bond ETF relative to its benchmark, the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Corporate bond Index.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio was both long and short equity index futures during the performance period as an efficient way to increase and/or decrease U.S. equity exposure. Overall, the futures contracts detracted from performance as they were used primarily to reduce equity exposure per the volatility control mandate of the fund. The futures were positive contributors in the first quarter, but with the strong equity rebound in the final three quarters of the year, the short positions resulted in losses which detracted from Portfolio performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,144.00	$6.13
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.42	5.77
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,145.50	4.79
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.67	4.51
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.14% and 0.89%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Thanks in part to substantial and widespread gains in the fourth quarter, the Portfolio was able to reverse much of the negative performance it saw in the first half of 2020, particularly in the beleaguered energy sector, which experienced huge equity and corporate-bond price swings and elevated volatility from March through October before rallying sharply through year-end.
- On the equity side, mixed results at the sector level featured solid gains for information technology (IT), industrials and materials holdings foremost. To a lesser extent, consumer discretionary and three other equity sector allocations also moved higher for the year.
- On the fixed income side of the Portfolio, seven out of 10 corporate bond sector exposures were net contributors for 2020 as a whole, as were short-term U.S. Treasury notes and government mortgage-backed holdings issued by GNMA, FNMA and Freddie Mac. Treasuries were a key part of the strategy during the year.
- Health care sector debt securities issued by hospital and clinic operator Community Health Systems, Inc. (CHS) were standout contributors. CHS, which operates acute care facilities, released a much stronger-than-expected earnings reports that eventually detailed its rebound from first-half 2020 challenges stemming from the pandemic's severe business impacts. Additionally, the company applied the proceeds from asset sales toward debt reduction and was able to access the debt and equity capital markets to meaningfully reduce its annual interest expense and extend the maturity profile of its capital structure.
- A wide range of other corporate bonds offered additional support, including key contributors Endo International plc (health care), T-Mobile U.S., Inc. (communication services) and Bank of America Corp. (financials).

What hurt performance during the year:

- The equity gains cited above were countered by overall losses in four sectors: energy, real estate, utilities and health care, with the bulk of their combined decline due to a sharp drop in the value of the Portfolio's energy equities.
- All energy holdings but one (French energy conglomerate TOTAL suffered double-digit percentage declines. Royal Dutch Shell plc, Weatherford International plc and Schlumberger Ltd. detracted most in the sector.
- In the financials sector, a common stock position in Wells Fargo & Co. shed more than half of its equity value. The other notable non-energy detractors included Intel Corp. (IT), Daimler AG (consumer discretionary) and Merck & Co., Inc. (health care).

EQ/FRANKLIN BALANCED MANAGED VOLATILITY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

- Among fixed income holdings, high-yield energy bonds of Chesapeake Utilities Corp. and HighPoint Operating Corp. detracted most as the firms' credit profiles deteriorated substantially during the historic selloff in oil and natural gas.
- Several other non-energy bond positions suffered steep, double-digit percentage declines during the time held, namely Belk, Inc. and 24 Hour Fitness Worldwide, Inc. in the consumer discretionary sector; generic drug maker Mallinckrodt plc in health care; and AMC Entertainment Holdings, Inc. in communication services. Deteriorating business fundamentals and mounting high-interest debt loads were generally behind the various credit downgrades.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 81 days.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook - Franklin Advisers, Inc.

The effect of continued ample liquidity in the form of monetary and fiscal policy support, which we believe is likely to continue to be provided across developed economies, has enabled many markets to shrug off the severe economic shocks inflicted by the COVID-19 pandemic. This has particularly been the case across fixed income sectors, where U.S. Treasury yields remain well below pre-pandemic levels and the Federal Reserve has committed to keeping rates lower for longer. As a result, we think the appeal of many fixed income sectors has diminished as the potential for attractive total returns has become more challenged. We also recognize that the extraordinary experience of 2020 created tremendous divergence within global equity markets, and that the sectors and companies that led the recovery may not be the leaders in 2021. While vaccine development and distribution offer hope for further recovery and normalization ahead, the current coronavirus surge being experienced by so many reminds us that significant risks remain.

Expectations of an eventual recovery from the pandemic have become well-established in financial markets and increasingly reflected in equity valuations, while ongoing governmental support and central bank liquidity have continued to bode well for the asset class in 2021. We also think equity opportunities in early 2021 may favor sectors that were distinct laggards in 2020, including financials and utilities. Specifically, we believe valuations in consumer discretionary and communication services have been attractive relative to technology and other high-flying sectors of the past year. However, uneven control of the coronavirus has left the U.S. and global economies far below their potential and pre-pandemic output. Efforts to return to economic normality have been slow and patchy amid the growing realization that localized COVID-19 flare-ups will remain an ongoing threat, at least until a vaccine becomes widely available. U.S. and global equities require a more convincing, sustained economic recovery to support elevated valuations despite the revival of corporate earnings since mid-2020. We believed the equity recovery would be uneven since the very start of the pandemic, and we continue to be selective in our investment process as the path forward remains extraordinarily uncertain.

An inconsistent global recovery and a bias toward easier monetary policy contrast with long-term fixed income valuations that remain expensive, in our view. Corporate bonds, having benefited directly from central bank support, generally show signs of no longer providing adequate compensation for the credit risk they contain. This challenging backdrop still presents us with bond-buying opportunities, as the asset class remains attractive to us on a more selective basis, in part because corporate debt can provide diversification and additional yield on top of that offered by similar maturity government bonds.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,115.50	$5.58
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.86	5.33
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,115.50	5.58
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.86	5.33

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA and Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.05% and 1.05%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- West Pharmaceutical Services, Inc. supported relative performance as its business saw strong demand for its products in recent quarters as demand from companies working to create therapeutics to combat COVID-19 was strong. The company boasts a very resilient business model and has strong long-term growth prospects even after the positive short-term impact from COVID-19 passes.

- Lithium producer Albemarle Corp. boosted relative returns on optimism that rising demand for lithium from electric vehicle producers will increase over the medium term as battery costs continue to decline, which should help reduce oversupply.
- Enterprise software firm Microsoft Corp. boosted relative performance following a strong earnings report and on optimism its cloud-based services could benefit as more people work from home during the coronavirus pandemic. The company has seen strength in its commercial cloud services and in sales of Windows as customers migrated away from Windows 7 in recent quarters. We believe that the trends of helping business customers move to the cloud and providing workers with productivity tools should support attractive growth over the medium to longer term.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Medical products supplier Becton, Dickinson & Co. hindered relative performance. While earnings were better than anticipated for its latest quarter, revenues were below consensus expectations in its medical and life sciences businesses. We expect that Becton, Dickinson will see better demand for medical supplies as routine health care services bounce back, and the company could benefit from its COVID-19 test and demand for related medical products.
- In the industrials sector, aerospace and defense firms General Dynamics Corp. and Raytheon Co. curbed relative performance amid continued weakness in the civil aviation market. Despite the ongoing global pandemic, Raytheon believes that the second quarter was the bottom for sales and earnings, with modest improvement forecasts for the third quarter and stronger results in the fourth quarter when defense spending is seasonally strong.
- Occidental Petroleum Corp., an oil and gas exploration and production company, hampered relative performance as the global pandemic has reduced economic activity and pressured crude oil prices in 2020.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Franklin Advisers, Inc.

At period end, the Portfolio's largest sector concentration was industrials, followed by information technology and health care.

As we enter 2021, the outlook for U.S. equities remains uncertain, though we see encouraging signs that economic activity can continue to rebound, particularly as vaccination rates increase over the coming months and the pandemic is brought under better control. The outlook for corporate earnings and dividend payments has also improved materially in recent months.

EQ/FRANKLIN RISING DIVIDENDS PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

After the sudden and steep drop-off in economic activity in early 2020, U.S. economic data have shown that activity picked up faster than many had expected. The labor market also regained momentum as states reopened their economies and services jobs began to return. However, unemployment remains well above where it was before the pandemic began, and the most recent surge in COVID-19 cases across the country has led to a deceleration in job creation. While we are encouraged by the economy's overall resilience, we will continue to monitor the potential for disruption from the pandemic over the coming months.

Fiscal and monetary stimulus has been instrumental in supporting the economy. The U.S. government's initial stimulus helped shore up many consumers' finances, leading to increased spending while also helping consumers save more of their income. Furthermore, the Federal Reserve reduced interest rates and restarted its asset purchase program. As a result, the central bank injected a significant amount of liquidity into the financial and economic systems, which gave many investors and business leaders confidence that the Fed was helping to prevent a serious deterioration in economic activity. A new U.S. stimulus deal may also provide modest additional support to the U.S. economy.

Even as the economic trends have improved, we believe it is still unclear as to when the U.S. and global economies can get back to employment and growth levels reached before the pandemic started. COVID-19 outbreaks continue to flare up around the world. However, we could begin to see widespread vaccinations starting in the spring.

The picture for dividends has also brightened materially, particularly as corporate profits generally have been better than expected. Although some companies, such as those with more levered balance sheets or those operating in heavy cyclical industries, have reduced or suspended their dividends, dividends paid by our portfolio companies have been less negatively impacted than dividends paid by companies in the broader market. We believe the companies with investment-grade balance sheets and more resilient business models that comprise our strategy generally hold an advantage over their competition, given their attractive cash-flow generation capabilities. Every company will be impacted by COVID-19 in some way, but we believe the strategy's holdings may demonstrate an added measure of resilience given their fundamentals, market leading positions and prudent capital management decisions.

This strategy is not new for us—we have consistently sought to invest in companies with the potential for sustainable, quality earnings streams, and with strong cash flows and balance sheets that we think can withstand uncertain macroeconomic conditions. We believe companies with consistently rising dividends should, over time, have the potential to realize stock price appreciation. We select portfolio securities based on several criteria: We seek fundamentally sound companies (e.g., those with attractive margins and cash flow, along with low debt) that meet our standards for dividend growth consistency and magnitude, and we attempt to buy shares at what we believe are attractive prices.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

EQ/FRANKLIN RISING DIVIDENDS PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,219.80	$4.85
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.76	4.42
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.87%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 12.31% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 2000® Value Index, which returned 4.63% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- BJ's Wholesale Club Holdings, Inc., a warehouse club retailer, rose during the period as it benefited from increased consumer spending towards food at home as a result of the pandemic. Furthermore, BJ's reported strong membership growth and material market share gains as customers consolidated shopping trips and became increasingly focused on value. Longer term, we believe the company's membership model will provide it with a longer-tailed benefit, as a larger membership base increases sales in future years.

- Avient Corp., a higher value-add chemicals company, rose due to stronger than expected earnings results driven by sequential improvement in demand across all regions and end markets including health care, consumer discretionary and autos. The company also completed the acquisition of Clariant's Masterbatch business on July 1, 2020, which further improves the company's exposure to specialty applications and business mix, deriving approximately 60% of revenues from consumer, packaging and health care end markets. Additionally, the company's management guided for higher cost synergies from the transaction compared to initial estimates and remains committed to returning cash to shareholders and deleveraging the corporate balance sheet.
- Shares of Boot Barn Holdings, Inc., a western and work wear retailer, recovered strongly as the economy reopened post-lockdown early in the year. The company reported better-than-expected same store sales and lower promotional activity. It also benefited from increased consumer discretionary expenditures tied to the U.S. Congress passing a fiscal stimulus package.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Shares of Retail Properties of America, Inc., a shopping center real estate investment trust (REIT), declined as stay-at-home and closure guidelines issued to prevent the spread of COVID-19 exacerbated a challenging environment for the shopping center operator's brick-and-mortar retail tenants. Although mandatory closure orders have largely been rescinded and rent collections started to recover, some watch-list tenants are not expected to reopen. Also, previously more stable sectors such as fitness and casual dining may face new pressures as consumer behavior shifts in response to new social distancing and spacing regulations.
- Shares of Brinker International, Inc., an operator of casual dining restaurants, sold off early in the year as a result of coronavirus lockdowns, which resulted in mandatory closures of dining rooms. Brinker's leverage also increased, magnifying risk amidst an uncertain economic environment.
- Shares of luxury homebuilder Toll Brothers, Inc. declined as the spread of the novel coronavirus contributed to a deterioration in the housing market outlook early in the pandemic. Unemployment increased as businesses quickly responded to social distancing directives.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 83 days.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Franklin Mutual Advisers, LLC

The rally in small-cap stocks reversed the extreme selloff that occurred earlier in the year when the economy was shut down in an attempt to slow the coronavirus pandemic. Small companies generally have fewer business lines and a greater reliance on the domestic economy than their larger, diversified counterparts, and their share prices suffered disproportionately. The recent rotation, however, may be sustainable as small-cap and cyclical companies have historically benefited during economic recoveries.

Ongoing accommodative monetary policy and additional fiscal stimulus helped ease the effect of new coronavirus-related restrictions that began in late October and continued through the end of the period. The U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) indicated it will keep interest rates near zero through at least 2023. The Fed also added some outcome-based forward guidance to its quantitative easing during the fourth quarter, tying it to achieving its dual mandate of full employment and 2% annual inflation. U.S. lawmakers passed a year-end agreement on a $900 billion COVID relief package.

Third quarter gross domestic product (GDP) gained 33.4%, reversing most of the second quarter decline. The Atlanta Fed's "GDPNow" model at year-end was tracking U.S. GDP at an annual growth rate of just under 9% during the fourth quarter. However, risks are still elevated, and that estimate has come down from roughly 11% previously due to signs that the economy has lost some momentum since October, which the Fed has acknowledged.

Both headline and core retail sales fell month-over-month in November, yet remained at levels that held close to their September record highs. For the full quarter, expanding U.S. factory activity as measured by the Institute for Supply Management (ISM) Manufacturing Index increased from 55.4 to 60.7 (50 marks the neutral expansion/contraction threshold) as production, new orders, inventories, deliveries and employment all rose in the latest data. December's advance put the index at its highest point since 2018.

Despite the recent momentum, markets may continue to see pockets of volatility in early 2021. The direction of markets may be influenced by the success of the vaccine rollout, the global geopolitical environment and continued fiscal and monetary support. There are signs the value rally may continue as the economy shows signs of reopening and the yield curve is steepening, although we believe it remains important for investors to remain diversified across a wide range of market capitalizations and styles. Amid this uncertain environment, we remain focused on identifying opportunities to improve the quality of our positions at relatively attractive valuations. Our process of finding underappreciated and misunderstood companies with identifiable catalysts to unlock shareholder value may provide meaningful upside potential, and a degree of downside protection during turbulent periods. While unnerving at times, volatility remains an inherent part of investing in risk assets, and the market historically rewards investors who take a long-term perspective.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

- (1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and
- (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

EQ/FRANKLIN SMALL CAP VALUE MANAGED VOLATILITY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,328.80	$6.29
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.74	5.45
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,328.30	6.28
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.74	5.45

Actual	1,000.00	1,330.50	4.83
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.99	4.19

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.07%, 1.07% and 0.82%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Aggregate Bond Index	7.51	8.58

Returns for periods greater than one year are annualized.

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The Portfolio's investment-grade (IG) and high yield (HY) corporate bond allocations were the largest contributor to absolute performance, followed by allocation to collateralized loan obligations (CLOs).
- Additionally, allocations to sovereign emerging-market (EM) and developed market debt, non-US dollar denominated EM debt, commercial mortgage-backed securities, tax-exempt municipal bonds and U.S. Treasury Inflation-Protected Securities (TIPS) benefited absolute returns.

- Foreign currency performance gains were primarily from long Japanese yen and Indonesian rupiah and short New Zealand dollar positions.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Allocation to senior secured floating-rate loans detracted from absolute returns.
- Allocations to taxable municipal bonds, non-agency residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS) and non-US dollar denominated developed market debt hindered performance.
- Negative foreign currency returns were primarily from long exposure to the Norwegian krone, Uruguayan, Dominican and Colombian peso, euro, South African rand and Turkish lira. Short positions in the Australian dollar and Singapore dollar also detracted from results.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio utilized currency forwards, government bond futures, and index credit default swaps as a tool for efficient portfolio management and to manage overall portfolio risk. These derivative transactions may provide the same, or similar, net long or short exposure to certain currencies, government bonds, and credit sectors.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Franklin Advisers, Inc.

We maintained our largest exposure to corporate credit; we increased our HY allocation while decreasing IG corporate bond allocation during the 12-month reporting period. Within the securitized sectors, we favored RMBS. We reduced allocation to agency MBS, TIPS and taxable municipal bonds and increased our exposure to EM debt and tax-exempt municipal bonds.

As we enter 2021, we have reasons for cautious optimism, but we should not let our guard down. Overall, our base-case scenario is cautiously optimistic about the macroeconomic environment and the prospects for an economic rebound in the year ahead. We have a good shot at getting our economies — and our lives — back on track. Policymakers have made it clear they will continue to provide policy support in 2021 and possibly beyond. On the political front, the U.S. elections are now behind us.

We expect central bank and fiscal authorities will remain extraordinarily accommodative, increased savings rates and pent-up demand will continue to drive consumer strength, vaccine deployments will bolster consumer confidence, and the U.S. business environment will not suffer major adverse impact from domestic policy changes. In this baseline scenario, once the recovery is entrenched and COVID-19 has been brought under control, attention will need to shift to the medium- and longer-term uncertainties seeded by this extraordinary period, including the possibility of an inflation pick-up as activity accelerates, with the attendant impact on yields and high debt levels.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 8.54% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Bloomberg Barclays Global Aggregate Index, which returned 9.17% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Country positioning remained the key value-add overall. The largest contributor over the whole year was from the overweight to the U.S. bond market, followed by overweights to Canada, Malaysia and Mexico. Positioning in Japan, Romania and India were also leading value adds.
- Overall, currency was a small detractor. The largest positive contributor was from overweight allocations to the Mexican peso, Norwegian krona, Russian ruble and South African rand. Positioning in the Indonesian rupiah and Swedish krone also added value.
- Duration was a positive over the year. This was mainly from being underweight the front of the curve and the over 15 years maturities, and overweight the 8-10 years maturity buckets.
- Sector positioning was positive. Positioning in Investment Grade corporate and Sovereign sectors as well as off benchmark positioning in high yield bonds all added value.

What hurt performance during the year:

- There were few detractors to value from country allocation, although the largest was from positioning in the UK (generally underweight, to take positions in higher yielding smaller markets).
- In currency, an overweight to Brazilian real and underweight to Chinese renminbi detracted from value. Positioning in UK sterling, Japanese yen and Indonesian rupiah were the other main detractors.
- Foreign exchange hedging costs added to performance for the year.
- Positioning in quasi-sovereign mortgage-backed securities (MBS) and emerging market sectors detracted a small amount.
- Underweights to the 12 years part of the curve detracted from value.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Wells Capital Management, Inc.

The duration of the Portfolio finished 2020 at 6.78 years against a benchmark duration of 8.23 years at year end. While we believe a shorter than benchmark duration remains warranted for the time being, we do not believe yields will rise too far. On a global basis central banks will most likely stay accommodative to try and encourage growth post the global pandemic and with limited upward pressure on inflation this can persist through 2021. With a more easily transmissible variant of the COVID-19 virus and with outbreaks of the virus increasing, countries are in a race to roll out the vaccine to their populations, which is hindering growth and increasing debt, especially in the major economies.

The yield convergence that occurred from the fourth quarter of 2018 has paused as the interest rate cycle has turned up. At year end, we had reduced our overweight in the U.S. and Canada to neutral and increased our exposure to smaller emerging markets such as Hungary and Malaysia. Elsewhere, we believe the best value is to be found in other developing/emerging markets where there are superior nominal and real yields. We maintained over-weights to Brazil, Mexico, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Romania, Hungary, Russia and South Africa. In expectation of a cyclical low in yields this year we moved portfolios to a shorter duration profile and we maintain that. We prefer longer maturities in our favored emerging markets. The duration of the Portfolio remained shorter than benchmark but we believe, probably in the second half 2021, there will be an opportunity to increase duration.

As we look further out in 2021 and beyond, the downward pressure on the U.S. dollar continues, although it will not fall in a straight line and there will be corrective up-trades, the trend remains downward, which will help both non-US bonds and equities. As we expect a pause in the U.S. dollar downtrend in the first quarter of 2021 we reduced our underweight by reducing exposure to the South African rand and the Mexican peso. However, it is our view that a bounce in the U.S. dollar will be temporary and that it has much further to fall over the long term. Currencies that we currently have diversified over-weights to are the euro, Canadian dollar, Australia dollar, New Zealand dollar, Indonesian rupiah, and the Brazilian real.

There has been a recovery in corporate bond spreads since March's material widening, with both investment grade and high yield participating in the rally. We increased exposure to both EUR-denominated high yield and U.S. D-denominated investment grade corporate bonds in recent months. Security selection is key given the challenging economic backdrop, and where possible we are looking to take advantage of new issue premiums.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

The only derivatives used by the managers are forward foreign exchange transactions, known as "forwards". This helps the managers manage currency exposure and, with currency being the most volatile element of the Portfolio, the overall risk profile. Forwards are used to reduce risk by hedging the currency exposure of bonds purchased, to either the base currency of the Portfolio, or to reduce the tracking error risk of the Portfolio's benchmark currency risk.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,042.50	$4.88
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.36	4.82
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,042.60	4.88
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.36	4.82
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,044.60	3.60
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.62	3.56

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.95%, 0.95% and 0.70%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 14.22% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the International Proxy Index and the MSCI AC World (Net) Index, which returned 4.79% and 16.25%, respectively.

The following commentary describes key factors (such as stock selection and sector allocation decisions) that helped or hurt the Portfolio's performance relative to the MSCI AC World (Net) Index.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Overall, sector allocation was beneficial to the performance of the Portfolio relative to its benchmark, especially underweighting the energy sector.
- Stock selection in consumer discretionary and communication services also contributed. Within consumer discretionary, relative overweights in JD.com Inc. and Farfetch Ltd. were notable contributors to performance.
- Also contributing were overweight allocations to NIDEC (industrials), PayPal Holdings Inc. (IT) and Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co. (IT).

What hurt performance during the year:

- Underweight allocations to the consumer discretionary and information technology sectors also detracted from relative performance. Notably detracting were underweight allocations to Tesla, Inc. and Amazon.com, Inc. in the consumer discretionary sector and Apple, Inc. in the information technology sector.
- Security selection was detrimental overall, especially in the health care and financials sectors.
- An overweight allocation to Airbus SE in the industrials sector also detracted from relative performance for the period.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 62 days.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,233.10	$6.17

Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.86	4.32
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio 1.10%, 1.10% and 0.85%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 2.79% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Goldman Sachs Growth Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Year Corporate Bond Index, which returned 13.27%, 18.40% and 9.75%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance since inception:

- Despite the market downturn in the first quarter of 2020 as a result of the ongoing coronavirus outbreak (COVID-19), the market recovery in the last three quarters of 2020 offset those losses and lead to an overall positive contribution from the strategic allocation to global equities.
- Over the period, U.S. interest rates saw a sharp decrease with the onset of the coronavirus pandemic. Corporate bond spreads also widened in the first quarter, diminishing returns to corporate bonds. However, as this spread normalized in the last three quarters of the year, corporate bonds showed strong returns.

What hurt performance since inception:

- The Portfolio implements a strategic, long term asset allocation that resets on a monthly basis. Additionally, the strategy employs a methodology that attempts to manage Portfolio risk during periods of heightened volatility by moving certain equity exposures to cash. As a result of extremely elevated volatility levels witnessed during the first quarter of 2020 as a result of the novel coronavirus outbreak, the Portfolio progressively moved a substantial portion of its equity allocation to cash by the end of February and a portion of the equity portfolio remained de-risked through the second and third quarters. While this helped reduce the impact of the market drawdown in the first quarter, the Portfolio also participated less in the market rebound in the last three quarters of the year.

Portfolio Characteristics As of December 31, 2020

Weighted Average Life (Years)	7.50
Weighted Average Coupon (%)	3.50
Weighted Average Modified Duration (Years)*	6.40
Weighted Average Rating	BBB

* Modified duration is a measure of the price sensitivity of the Portfolio to interest rate movements, taking into account specific features of the securities in which it invests.

 Weighted Average Rating has been provided by the Investment Sub-Adviser. A credit rating is an assessment provided by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization (NRSRO) of the creditworthiness of an issuer with respect to debt obligations, including specific securities, money market instruments or other debts. Ratings are measured on a scale that generally ranges from AAA (highest) to D (lowest); ratings are subject to change without notice.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,119.00	$5.88
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.59	5.60
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,120.50	4.55
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.84	4.34

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.10% and 0.85%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 8.46% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell Midcap® Value Index, which returned 4.96% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the utilities and information technology sectors contributed to returns.
- Retail store company RH was a top contributor to returns during the period. The stock gained steadily to start the year and continued to rise following sequential periods of robust earnings. The company's strong pricing power, growing margins, and international growth prospects noted in its first quarter earnings boosted the share price later that period. A favorable real estate environment and international expansion in-line with managements' expectations acted as catalysts for growth, as the company transitioned toward an international luxury home lifestyle brand. We believe that strong near term performance due to its healthy affluent customer base will continue to drive demand for luxury furnishings. Given ongoing inventory improvement and strong current demand trends, we think there is potential for further valuation expansion as the business expands in international markets.

- Marvell Technology Group Ltd., an integrated circuit designer, developer and seller, was also a top contributor to returns. The company started the year favorably, due to its 5G network expansion and ongoing partnerships with Nokia and Samsung. Its performance remained strong throughout the year, as the company continued to expand its platform in the 5G space, with multi-year 5G chip partnerships and new 5nm design capabilities. Its shares continued to appreciate in the third quarter following the announcement of its acquisition of Inphi, accelerating its growth and leadership in the cloud and 5G infrastructure. We believe that the demand for data infrastructure remains strong and some design win announcements will indicate continued forward momentum in 2021.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the health care and financials sectors detracted from returns.
- Real estate investment trust company MFA Financial was a top detractor from returns during the period. Due to turmoil in the financial markets, the company experienced high levels of margin calls, which they were unable to meet, and higher funding costs in respect of its repositioning agreements. As a result, we decided to exit out of the position, as we feel that security prices will continue to be challenged in the short-term and liquidity is also tenuous.
- Retail company L Brands Inc. was also a top detractor from returns. The company experienced headwinds after it announced store closures, drawdown on credit facility, and withdrawal of first quarter guidance due to COVID-19 related uncertainties. The company experienced additional headwinds after reporting a substantial first quarter operating loss at Victoria Secret given its closed stores. Given weak earnings and inconsistent performance in Bath & Body Works and Victoria Secret brands, we decided to exit the position in favor of other risk-reward opportunities.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Goldman Sachs Asset Management L.P.

The U.S. equity market rebounded from pandemic-induced lows in the first quarter of 2020, rounding out the year with multiple tailwinds from pent-up demand to significant cash reserves. As the market anticipates a recovery alongside the rollout of the vaccine, we remain vigilant in navigating through optimistic market sentiment given the potential for volatility. While we see a path to an uptick in global economic activity to support further market upside, we caution that the economy remains in the infancy of its recovery and uneven progress suggests that full macro normalization will remain dependent on the trajectory of COVID-19 recovery, successful global vaccine distribution, and ongoing fiscal and monetary policy. As the economic expansion widens, we expect the equity market rally to continue, but with broader sector participation. Within this recovery period, we believe that it is crucial to stay true to our quality-first investment approach. As always, we seek to invest in businesses with healthy balance sheets, relatively stable free cash flow generation, and differentiated business models aligned to secular advantages. We continue to test our models and re-evaluate our assumptions with increasing information, and stay focused on the long-term investment horizon.

EQ/GOLDMAN SACHS MID CAP VALUE PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,293.60	$6.28
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.66	5.53

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.09%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Despite the market downturn in the first quarter of 2020 as a result of the ongoing coronavirus outbreak

(COVID-19), the market recovery in the last three quarters of 2020 offset those losses and lead to an overall positive contribution from the strategic allocation to global equities.

- Over the period U.S. interest rates saw a sharp decrease, with the yield of a U.S. Treasury 10-year bond falling from 1.92% at the end of December 2019 to 0.91% at the end of December 2020. This led to a strong rally in U.S. 7-10 Year Treasury securities. Consequently, the Portfolio's strategic allocation to fixed income was a significant contributor to performance.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The Portfolio implements a strategic, long term asset allocation that resets on a monthly basis. Additionally, the strategy employs a methodology that attempts to manage Portfolio risk during periods of heightened volatility by moving certain equity exposures to cash. As a result of extremely elevated volatility levels witnessed during the first quarter of 2020 as a result of the novel coronavirus outbreak, the Portfolio progressively moved a substantial portion of its equity allocation to cash by the end of February and a portion of the equity portfolio remained de-risked through the second and third quarters. While this helped reduce the impact of the market drawdown in the first quarter, the Portfolio also participated less in the market rebound in the last three quarters of the year.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,090.00	$6.05
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.35	5.85
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.15%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Asset Class Overview

In response to market turmoil brought about by the pandemic, the Federal Reserve, who in the beginning of the year was comfortable holding rates steady at 1.50%-1.75% through 2021, first cut rates off-cycle by 50 basis points (bps), before following up with a 100 bps cut to a zero lower bound in March. Due to the all but non-existent liquidity, the Fed announced 12 different programs to enhance market liquidity, including unlimited quantitative easing. In addition, congress passed a historic $2 trillion stimulus package with provisions aimed at helping American workers, small businesses and industries grappling with the economic disruption. The massive amounts of aid provided by both the Fed and congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. In fact, at the final meeting of the year, Fed Chair Powell was optimistic and said that he expected the economy to perform "strongly" in the second half of 2021, noting that the Fed upgraded their forecast for economic growth in 2021 and 2022 to a median projection of 4.2% and 3.2% respectively (though they continued to expect to hold the federal funds rate near zero at least through 2023.)

Though the markets stabilized throughout the year, economic data suffered from the ongoing strain of the pandemic. Unemployment jumped to 14.7% in April due to widespread shutdowns and though we have seen improvement, at 6.7% as of year end, it's still double what was reported pre-pandemic. Housing was a continuous bright spot throughout the year with purchases of new single-family homes advancing to the highest level in almost 14 years as record-low mortgage rates enticed buyers.

As the pandemic continues to rage on with deaths surpassing 3000 people per day in the United States, the November announcement of successful vaccine trials by multiple biotech and pharmaceutical companies has given hope that there is an end in sight to the pandemic. Though we are not out of the woods yet, vaccines have already started rolling out to front line medical personnel as well as the elderly around the world as of mid-December.

Portfolio Highlights

Main contributors to Portfolio performance included the decrease in treasury yields, the widening and subsequent tightening of bond spreads, as well as the Federal Reserve's cut of interest rates to a zero lower bound in response to March's liquidity crisis.

This Portfolio is neither guaranteed nor insured by the U.S. Government, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or any other government agency.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 8.45% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the International Proxy Index and the MSCI EAFE® Index, which returned 4.79% and 7.82%, respectively.

The following commentary describes key factors (such as stock selection and sector allocation decisions) that helped or hurt the Portfolio's performance relative to the MSCI EAFE Index.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Security selection was positive in all sectors, led by the financials, health care and consumer discretionary sectors.
- An underweight allocation relative to the benchmark in the energy and real estate sectors added to performance.
- BYD Company Limited Class H and Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co., Ltd. were among the largest contributors to the Portfolio's overall performance.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Overall, sector allocation detracted from the Portfolio, including underweighting the financials, consumer discretionary, materials, industrials and utilities sectors.
- In Industrials, names with exposure to the automotive and aerospace end markets suffered from the impact caused by global lockdowns in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 62 days.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,227.80	$5.96
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.79	5.40
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,227.50	5.96
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.79	5.40
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,229.50	4.56
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.04	4.14

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.05%, 1.05% and 0.80%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were information technology, materials, consumer discretionary, industrials and consumer staples.

- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were ASML Holdings NV, LVMH Moët Hennessy Louis Vuitton SE, Linde plc, Siemens AG and Schneider Electric SE.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were energy, financials and real estate.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were HSBC Holdings plc, BP plc, Royal Dutch Shell plc A Shares, Royal Dutch Shell plc B Shares and Airbus SE.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivatives positions have little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

EQ/INTERNATIONAL EQUITY INDEX PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.79%, 0.79% and 0.54%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 4.20% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the International Proxy Index and the MSCI EAFE® Index, which returned 4.79% and 7.82%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- South Korea delivered the Portfolio's top relative result and generated a solid absolute return. Both underlying holdings in this country (NAVER Corp. and Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd.) posted positive double-digit returns for the year.

- Stock selection and a less-than-benchmark weighting in Spain provided the next best relative result as its single underlying holding, Amadeus IT Group SA, gained value.
- The energy sector generated the best relative performance primarily from a less-than-benchmark weighting, and stock selection also produced a positive result.
- Stock selection was the main driver that made industrials the second-best relative performer, led by Ashtead Group plc and Ryanair Holdings plc.
- Top individual contributors included consumer discretionary holding Daimler AG (Germany) and communication services holding NAVER Corp. (South Korea).

What hurt performance during the year:

- Japan supplied the Portfolio's worst relative performance mainly due to a less-than-benchmark weighting, while stock selection also had a slightly negative impact even though three of four underlying holdings posted double-digit positive absolute returns for the period.
- A lack of exposure to Denmark supplied the next weakest relative result.
- Stock selection, along with an underweight sector allocation, made the materials sector the weakest relative performer.
- Largest individual detractors included industrials holding Rolls-Royce Holdings plc (U.K.), financials holding Lloyds Banking Group plc(U.K.) and health care holding Bayer AG (Germany).

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 62 days.
- During the year, the Portfolio held hedges on the Swiss franc. At year-end, approximately 13% of the underlying franc was hedged. We believe this currency has appreciated above the range of its intrinsic value as measured by purchasing power parity and other economic fundamentals. Currency hedges detracted six basis points (cumulatively) from the Portfolio's performance for the year.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Harris Associates LP

This year amounted to a volatile 12 months for investors. Though traumatic and difficult to tolerate, we recognize that market instability can unearth investment opportunities for those who are patient and willing to weather the storm. In times when others chase performance or lose conviction based on news headlines and irrational reactions, we remain alert to subsequent opportunities caused by short-term investors to build positions in quality companies that are trading at large discounts to our perception of their intrinsic value. This discipline is deeply embedded in our philosophy and process.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,242.90	$6.22
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.59	5.60
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,242.90	6.22
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.59	5.61
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,244.60	4.80
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.86	4.32

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.10%, 1.10% and 0.85%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned (0.77)% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 1000® Value Index, which returned 2.80% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Stock selection and an overweight within information technology was the largest contributor to relative performance for the period. QUALCOMM, Inc. and Microsoft Corp. were the largest contributors to the Portfolio's performance. Large bellwether software and equipment technology companies benefited from increased demand as employees in most service sectors worked from home. Microsoft beat earnings estimates in multiple quarters and provided strong guidance, as they have benefited from predictable growth in both their cloud business and Azure, as well as sustained demand for Office 365.

- Strong security selection in the industrials sector was a key contributor to the Portfolio's relative return. FedEx Corp., a relatively new holding (purchased in the first quarter), was the largest individual contributor. We invested in FedEx based on its ability to charge higher prices amid a reduction in international air capacity, its lower cost structures resulting from a more efficient fleet and lower operating costs stemming from the integration of TNT Express, all of which we believe will contribute to an eventual recovery in profit margins.
- A material underweight to real estate also benefited relative performance for the quarter. The real estate sector within the benchmark declined more than 9% for the period.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection and a material overweight position in energy detracted the most from relative performance for the period as the sector was the worst performing sector within the benchmark. Oil prices experienced an unprecedented "double black swan event" due to Saudi Arabia and Russia increasing supply to gain market share and global demand shocks from the COVID-19 virus. We believe COVID-19 implications should ease and business activity will resume, which should be supportive of demand. We continue to focus on balance sheets and debt levels for the energy holdings.
- Within consumer discretionary, Carnival Corp. was a notable detractor as the cruise industry was hit particularly hard by the coronavirus outbreak, with cruises from the U.S. canceled through spring of 2021. In early April, we exited the position because we believe cruise demand will be slower to recover than other areas within the consumer discretionary sector.
- Stock selection in communication services also dampened relative performance. The Portfolio did not own The Walt Disney Co., a large content provider and holding within the benchmark, and the stock rose over 25% for the period.
- Stock selection and material overweight hindered relative performance within financials. The precipitous decline in interest rates during the first quarter of 2020, from already low levels, weighed heavily on the sector. Although financials have recovered significantly from their lows earlier in the year, large banks are trading at what we believe are extremely attractive valuations. We have invested in large banks based on sweeping changes such as improved balance sheets, lower leverage and solid capital positions.

How did derivatives contribute/deduct from performance during the year?

- We used currency forward contracts during the year for the purpose of hedging currency exposure of non-US-based companies held in the Portfolio. Derivatives were used solely for the purpose of hedging and not for speculative purposes or leverage. The use of currency forward contracts had a slightly positive impact on the Portfolio's performance relative to the benchmark for the year.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Invesco Advisers, Inc.

At year end, the Portfolio had a cyclical bias with overweight exposures to financial and energy companies. The Portfolio was also overweight technology stocks and health care. Conversely, the Portfolio was underweight real estate, utilities, communication services, consumer discretionary and consumer staples.

As we've seen a rotation towards value stocks towards the end of the year, we remain cautiously optimistic towards the longer-term outlook for the U.S. and global economies. Though the distribution of coronavirus vaccines should provide a level of stability, we believe equity markets may experience continued volatility due to the leadership transition in Washington DC and rising COVID-19 infection rates.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 27.01% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the MSCI AC World (Net) Index, which returned 16.25% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The Portfolio outperformed the benchmark in nine of 11 sectors in 2020, led by holdings in the communication services, consumer discretionary, energy, information technology and consumer staples sectors.
- Holdings in JD.com Inc., Alphabet Inc, PayPal Holdings Inc., Adobe Incorporated and Facebook, Inc. each contributed in excess of 2% of absolute performance over the course of 2020.

- The Portfolio owned no positions in the utilities sector during the year, which was beneficial to relative performance.

What hurt performance during the year:

- There were just two sectors which detracted from relative performance in 2020. They were the materials and real estate sectors.
- Materials is a sector in which the Portfolio held no positions during the year. This positioning detracted from relative performance as the sector had strong returns for the benchmark.
- Real Estate underperformance was driven by a single security, DLF Limited, an Indian real estate concern. An underweight allocation offset some of the security selection.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — EQ/Invesco Advisers, Inc.

Portfolio holdings are selected based on our analysis of the sustainability of their purpose and the sensibility of their price. We believe that, if we have this combination well calibrated, the Portfolio should be able to weather most transient challenges and create meaningful economic value for our clients over the medium to long-term.

We invest with a long-term structural mindset, considering the attractiveness of a company's attributes and ecosystem over as long as a 10-year horizon. Thus, the cyclical influences weigh very little on our thinking about, or the positioning of, the Portfolio. This remains the case. Our holdings are largely invested in industries that are growing organically, on a sustained basis, and our individual holdings are substantial beneficiaries. At year end, the Portfolio's sector overweights remained in the information technology, communication services, industrials and consumer discretionary sectors. Underweights to the financials, consumer staples and materials sectors remained noteworthy.

EQ/INVESCO GLOBAL PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,295.80	$6.64
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.35	5.84
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,295.90	6.64
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.35	5.84

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA and Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.15% and 1.15%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned (12.22)% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the FTSE EPRA/NAREIT Global (Net) Index, which returned (9.95)% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Relative contributors to performance in the Asia Pacific region included countries such as Hong Kong, Japan, China and Australia, all benefiting from strong security selection.

- Top contributors to the Portfolio's absolute performance during the year came from the residential sector and included Vonovia SE, a German residential property owner with a stable income profile and ample growth opportunities.
- A number of diversified real estate investment trusts (REITs) also did well over the year, including Hang Lung Properties Ltd. and Longfor Group Holdings Ltd.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Overall, the Portfolio underperformed its style-specific benchmark during a year of negative performance. Key relative detractors included security selection in the U.S., an overweight allocation to Spain, and an underweight allocation to Sweden.
- Top detractors from the Portfolio's absolute performance during the year included holdings in the lodging sector such as Pebblebrook Hotel Trust and Park Hotels and Resorts, Inc. as the lodging sector suffered from COVID-19 related travel bans. Top detractors from absolute performance also included Boston Properties, Inc. in the office sector, which was negatively impacted from a decrease in tenant demand due to work from home policies.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Invesco Advisers, Inc.

The overall desire is to maintain a portfolio with a bias toward companies with higher quality assets, supply constrained real estate market exposure, generally lower leveraged balance sheets and better governance characteristics. However, we may also seek to source opportunities where a sharp decline in REIT share prices in the short term appears to have overly punished companies. The unpredictable macro and geopolitical environments suggest caution in taking active factor, country and currency exposures. As such, portfolio risk is still most likely to be allocated to specific stock opportunities where there is a belief that attractive relative value exists. Within the broader investment market context, cash flow security, discounted valuations relative to underlying assets and the tangible asset nature of real estate appear to offer relative attraction to a diversified investor. On this basis, we view listed real estate as offering fair to attractive relative return opportunities at present, as part of a wider investment portfolio allocation.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,106.50	$6.34
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.12	6.08
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.20%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 13.61% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the MSCI ACWI ex U.S. Growth (Net) Index, which returned 22.20% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Portfolio holdings in the industrials sector outperformed those of the benchmark, contributing to relative performance. Within the sector, France-based Schneider Electric SE, a company that specializes in products and services which help to control/streamline energy consumption, Japan-based Nidec Corp., a manufacturer of electric motors, and FANUC Corp., a Japanese manufacturer of factory-automation systems and robots, contributed to both absolute and relative results during the fiscal year. Not owning select style-specific benchmark names, including Airbus SE and Safran SA, also added to relative return.

- Having no exposure to the weaker real estate and utilities sectors also had a positive impact on relative performance.
- On a geographic basis, Portfolio holdings in India and Australia outperformed those of the benchmark and contributed to relative return. Underweight exposure to both countries added to relative results during the year as well.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection and an underweight in information technology was the largest detractor from relative return. Within the sector, weakness was seen in Spain-based Amadeus IT Group SA and Germany-based software company SAP SE. During the year, we exited the Portfolio's position in Amadeus IT Group due to a deterioration in its earnings that was COVID-related and limited visibility around turnaround of air travel. We also exited the Portfolio's position in SAP due to deteriorating Earnings-Quality-Valuation (EQV) characteristics.
- The Portfolio's holdings in the health care sector underperformed those of the benchmark sector, detracting from relative results. Lack of exposure to strong benchmark performers, including Japan-based companies M3, Inc. and Daiichi Sankyo Co. Ltd., hampered relative results. Underweight exposure to health care dragged on relative results as well.
- Stock selection in the energy sector negatively affected relative return. Canada-based Suncor Energy, Inc. and TechnipFMC plc were notable detractors from both absolute and relative performance. We exited both positions during the year.
- Geographically, the Portfolio's holdings in the UK, Canada, China and Germany underperformed those of the benchmark and were among the largest detractors from relative performance. Underweight exposure to the strong Chinese market and overweight exposure to Germany also had a negative impact on relative return.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Invesco Advisers, Inc.

During the year, we continued to look for opportunities to improve the growth potential and quality of the Portfolio by adding companies based on our EQV outlook for each company. During the COVID-19 market selloff, our trading activity picked up to take advantage of the broadening opportunity set. We added several new holdings, including Mexico-based retailer Walmart de México y Centroamérica, Switzerland-based food and drink processing company Nestle SA and Switzerland-based pharmaceuticals company Roche Holding AG. We sold several holdings during the year, including France-based testing, inspection and certification company Bureau Veritas SA, France-based concessions and construction company Vinci SA and UK-based industrials company RELX plc. After owning RELX for over a decade, we exited the Portfolio's position because the thesis had run its course and we started to question the long-term organic revenue potential. We felt there were better growth opportunities elsewhere in the Portfolio.

EQ/INVESCO INTERNATIONAL GROWTH PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

As always, we remain focused on a bottom-up investment approach of identifying attractive companies that fit our EQV-focused investment process. We continue to look for high-quality companies that exhibit the following characteristics: strong organic growth; high returns on capital; pricing power; strong balance sheets; cash generation; and reasonable valuations. In addition, we continue to favor companies that are able to consistently generate cash during weak economic environments. Our balanced EQV-focused approach aligns with our goal of delivering attractive risk-adjusted returns over the long term.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 8.53% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Invesco Moderate Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 10.88%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

- Portfolio asset class performance was representative of the respective asset class index.
 - U.S. Equities. Despite experiencing significant volatility throughout the year, U.S. equities produced strong positive returns. Large-cap stocks produced the strongest returns, followed by small cap and then mid-cap stocks, while growth stocks led core and value. Within the S&P 500 Index, the information technology and consumer discretionary sectors produced the strongest gains, while the energy sector significantly lagged all other sectors.
 - International equities. International equity markets also produced strong returns during the year but underperformed domestic equities. Emerging markets generally outperformed developed markets. Having managed the pandemic well, Asia ex-Japan stocks performed positively, making them well-positioned to participate in a more robust economic recovery fueled by the vaccine.
 - Fixed income. All four primary sectors of the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Aggregate Bond Index — government-related, corporate, securitized and treasury — posted positive returns for the fiscal year. Strong performance among fixed income assets was largely attributable to the sharp decline in U.S. Treasury yields as well as a rally in spread sector assets.
 - Although the Portfolio was unhedged throughout January and much of February, the Portfolio's hedge was in place throughout most of the year given the heightened levels of volatility. Hedging was at its highest levels during the month of April and in early May as economies grappled with uncertainty and lockdowns due to the pandemic. The hedge was removed during July and August but was enacted during much of September. Volatility decreased after the Federal Reserve extended its emergency stimulus programs and changed its inflation target policy and the Portfolio was unhedged for most of October. The hedge was enacted again in late October and the first half of November due to the ongoing pandemic and uncertainty surrounding the U.S. presidential election. The hedge was removed in mid-November and was not utilized in December.
- What helped performance during the year:
- All of the Portfolio's allocations posted positive performance and contributed to absolute performance results.
 - The U.S. large-cap equity allocation was the leading contributor to both absolute and relative performance during the year.

EQ/INVESCO MODERATE ALLOCATION PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

- Portfolio allocations to U.S. small and mid-cap equities also meaningfully contributed to absolute and relative performance results.

What hurt performance during the year:

- There were no detractors from absolute performance during the year.
- The Portfolio's fixed income allocation posted a solid gain but trailed the benchmark and was the largest detractor from relative performance.
- The Portfolio's allocation to international equities also trailed the benchmark and detracted from relative performance results.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Invesco Advisers, Inc.

The portfolio seeks diversification through broad exposure to U.S. and international equity markets as well as U.S. fixed income. The portfolio pursues upside market participation while actively managing portfolio volatility.

The greatest upside to our economic outlook would be a meaningful change in the health outlook for COVID-19 that leads to a return to normal consumer behavior sooner than expected. Downside risks include a sharp uptick in infections that results in more lasting changes to consumer behavior, a renewal of lockdowns and a premature reduction in policy support.

In this environment, we expect massive monetary policy stimulus will continue to provide some support to risk assets. However, we expect significant volatility and the potential for stock pullbacks in coming weeks as concerns about a contested U.S. presidential election grow. We recommend broad diversification within the equity and fixed-income allocations of an investor's portfolio. We recommend adequate exposure to alternative asset classes, including real estate, gold, commodities and cash. Finally, we strongly encourage investors to remain well-diversified.

Portfolio Characteristics As of December 31, 2020

Weighted Average Life (Years)	3.94
Weighted Average Coupon (%)	1.02
Weighted Average Effective Duration (Years)*	3.81
Weighted Average Rating	AAA

* Effective duration is a measure of the price sensitivity of the Portfolio to interest rate movements, taking into account specific features of the securities in which it invests.

 Weighted Average Rating has been provided by the Investment Sub-Adviser. A credit rating is an assessment provided by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization (NRSRO) of the creditworthiness of an issuer with respect to debt obligations, including specific securities, money market instruments or other debts. Ratings are measured on a scale that generally ranges from AAA (highest) to D (lowest); ratings are subject to change without notice.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

EQ/INVESCO MODERATE ALLOCATION PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,077.60	$6.17
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.20	5.99
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.18%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 9.14% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Invesco Moderate Growth Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Year Corporate Bond Index, which returned 12.83%, 18.40% and 9.75%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

- Portfolio asset class performance was representative of the respective asset class index.
- U.S. Equities. Despite experiencing significant volatility throughout the year, U.S. equities produced strong positive returns. Large-cap stocks produced the strongest returns, followed by small cap and then mid-cap stocks, while growth stocks led core and value. Within the S&P 500 Index, the information technology and consumer discretionary sectors produced the strongest gains, while the energy sector significantly lagged all other sectors.
- International equities. International equity markets also produced strong returns during the year but underperformed domestic equities. Emerging markets generally outperformed developed markets. Having managed the pandemic well, Asia ex-Japan stocks performed positively, making them well-positioned to participate in a more robust economic recovery fueled by the vaccine.
- Fixed income. All four primary sectors of the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Aggregate Bond Index — government-related, corporate, securitized and treasury — posted positive returns for the fiscal year. Strong performance among fixed income assets was largely attributable to the sharp decline in U.S. Treasury yields as well as a rally in spread sector assets.
- Although the Portfolio was unhedged throughout January and much of February, the Portfolio's hedge was enacted throughout most of 2020 given the heightened levels of volatility. Hedging began February 24th and was at its highest levels during the month of April and in early May as economies grappled with uncertainty and lockdowns due to the pandemic. The hedge was removed during July and August but was enacted during much of September. Volatility decreased after the Federal Reserve extended its emergency stimulus programs and changed its inflation target policy and the Portfolio was unhedged for most of October. The hedge was enacted again in late October and for the first half of November as the Portfolio's forecasted volatility rose due to the uncertainty surrounding the U.S. presidential election. The hedge was removed in late November just before Thanksgiving and was not utilized in December.

What helped performance during the year:

- All of the Portfolio's allocations posted positive performance and contributed to absolute performance results. The allocation to U.S. large cap equities led absolute performance results followed by the allocation to fixed income.

EQ/INVESCO MODERATE GROWTH ALLOCATION PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

- The allocation to U.S. large cap equities was the leading contributor to relative performance results as well.

What hurt performance during the year:

- There were no detractors from absolute performance during the year.
- The Portfolio's fixed income allocation posted a solid gain but trailed the benchmark and was the largest detractor from relative performance.
- The Portfolio's allocation to international equities also trailed the benchmark and detracted from relative performance results.
- The Portfolio's volatility hedge detracted from relative performance results as well.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Invesco Advisers, Inc.

The Portfolio seeks diversification through broad exposure to U.S. and international equity markets as well as U.S. fixed income. The Portfolio pursues upside market participation while actively managing Portfolio volatility.

The greatest upside to our economic outlook would be a meaningful change in the health outlook for COVID-19 that leads to a return to normal consumer behavior sooner than expected. Downside risks include a sharp uptick in infections that results in more lasting changes to consumer behavior, a renewal of lockdowns and a premature reduction in policy support.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

Please note that while the Portfolio commenced operations on February 1, 2019, the 'Hypothetical expenses paid during the period' reflect projected activity for the full six months for the purpose of comparability.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,111.60	$6.22
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.25	5.95
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,113.20	4.89
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.50	4.68
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.17% and 0.92%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

- Boston Scientific Corp., Sensata Technologies Holding plc and Cimpres plc were prominent detractors from relative performance.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Janus Capital Management LLC

As we look ahead to 2021, we believe the rollout of vaccines and the normalization of the economy could lead to renewed appreciation for the moderately priced, sustainable growth companies we own. At the same time, we recognize that recent market imbalances may persist in the short term, especially as it may take time for people to return to pre-pandemic behavior even after a vaccine is widely available. We also remain concerned about pockets of the market where we believe recent valuation gains have been driven more by speculation than by fundamentals. While a few of these stocks may warrant such prices, we believe it is incredibly optimistic to expect most to deliver the sustained rapid earnings growth needed to justify such valuations, especially considering historic growth rates. For this reason, we have remained disciplined in our approach to valuation, even as we have continued to focus on companies we believe can deliver sustained growth over a three- to five-year period. These include companies with durable competitive advantages and large addressable markets with higher barriers to entry, which will enable companies to raise prices if higher inflation accompanies an economic rebound. We also believe the recent period has led to new innovations, especially in the digital economy. We remain on the lookout for opportunities to capitalize on these changes by investing in reasonably valued companies we believe are positioned for strong relative growth over longer time horizons.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,290.10	$6.04
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.86	5.33
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,290.90	6.04
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.86	5.33
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,292.10	4.61
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.12	4.06

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.05%, 1.05% and 0.80%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Includes income resulting from a special dividend. Without this dividend, the per share income amounts would be $(0.06), $(0.06) and $(0.02) for Class IA, Class IB and Class K, respectively.

[^] Portfolio turnover rate excludes derivatives, if any.

[†] The amount shown for a share outstanding throughout the period does not accord with the aggregate net income and/or gain on investments for that period because of the timing of sales and repurchases of the Portfolio shares in relation to fluctuating market value of the investments in the Portfolio.

(e) Net investment income (loss) per share is based on average shares outstanding.

(f) Expenses do not include the expenses of the underlying funds ("indirect expenses"), if applicable.

(cc) Includes income resulting from a litigation payment. Without this income, the total return would have been 36.29% for Class IA, 36.29% for Class IB and 36.63% for Class K.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Asset Class Overview

The year 2020 will forever be remembered as the year of the virus. At the start of 2020, the macroeconomic environment looked primed for a modest acceleration following the tariff-induced slowdown in manufacturing, trade and industry in 2019. As the global outbreak of COVID-19 gathered force in the first quarter, various forms of lockdowns and quarantines ensued, sending the global economy into recession. Governments and central banks intervened quickly and forcefully, with stimulus packages of unprecedented size and scope, and markets were quick to react. Investors began to price in a recovery for an economy that had been on sound footing before the virus outbreak, and the market quickly exhibited the fastest rebound on record, with the S&P 500 Index experiencing pre-virus levels by August. Though cases of COVID-19 continued to rise throughout the fall, markets rose in November on the back of a vaccine rollout led by Pfizer and Moderna, as well as tempered volatility after the U.S. election. Moving into year end, Congress approved an additional $900 billion stimulus package in the form of direct payments to individuals and expanded unemployment benefits.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio's risk managed framework de-risked during the year and detracted from performance, while strategic asset allocation contributed.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The team uses derivatives in the form of futures predominately throughout the Portfolio. Futures offer an efficient way to gain access to various markets.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — J.P. Morgan Investment Management Inc.

The global recovery is set to broaden out, with 2021 likely to see growth above trend. Ample slack in the economy suggests inflation will pick up only slowly, so monetary policy is likely to remain supportive throughout the year. Nevertheless, the main driver of asset returns likely transitions from liquidity to growth over the course of 2021. This implies potential for short-lived pockets of volatility, but over the year as a whole we anticipate benign market conditions and a continued decline in volatility. At year end, we maintained a pro-risk tilt, spread across stocks and credit. The Portfolio was underweight equities by ~1.7%, split between U.S. and Developed International. We prefer cyclical equities including U.S. small cap, Europe and Japan, and were underweight the UK.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,125.00	$6.18
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.32	5.87
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.16%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 11.09% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 1000® Value Index, which returned 2.80% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Strong stock selection and underweight allocations to the information technology and consumer staples sectors contributed to Portfolio results.
- Overweight allocations to the consumer discretionary and materials sectors also added value.

- The combination of positive stock selection and an overweight allocation to materials was a primary driver of outperformance. Our position in Celanese Corp. (CE), a chemical company that specializes in manufacturing of engineered materials and acetyls, was a bright spot. The company confirmed that industry conditions have improved as volumes are quickly recovering; CE will be a beneficiary of the shift to electric vehicles which has a greater content of engineered polymers. We continue to have an optimistic outlook on CE.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the utilities sector was the only detractor from Portfolio results.
- An underweight allocation to the financials sector amplified the negative impact on Portfolio results, owing to its weak performance.
- Given the magnitude of outperformance, it's hard to point to too many areas of weakness for the year. That said, it is worth noting that Wells Fargo & Co. (WFC) was the largest stock specific detractor from performance as it faced a number of industry and company specific headwinds, which accelerated in 2020. WFC has suffered from a lack of loan growth and lower net interest margins, along with all banks, but has been under additional pressure due to the asset cap on their balance sheet. CEO Charlie Scharf recently spoke at a conference in December, suggesting that 2021 will be another year of transition. With patience, we believe WFC's multiple will reflate given a strong regional deposit banking franchise and management's commitment to organizational improvement.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — J.P. Morgan Investment Management Inc.

Coming into the fourth quarter, there were two huge sources of uncertainty: the potential for a successful COVID vaccine and the U.S. Presidential election. Now that we have more clarity on these two issues, investors are willing to pay up for higher levels of cyclicality, which is clear given the significant rotation we've seen within markets.

Until we start to see valuation spreads widen further, we will maintain relatively wide sector bets. Given our conviction in the continuation of an economic recovery, we are also comfortable with the portfolio's higher beta and pro-cyclical tilt.

At year end, we had a large overweight to the consumer discretionary sector given that the consumer savings rate is high, interest rates remain low, and consumer confidence is strong thanks to the unprecedented amount and speed of fiscal stimulus. That said, the nature of how we're playing the consumer recovery has shifted somewhat.

Early in the spring, we had large exposure to autos and housing; given the rebound in these segments of the economy, we added positions in retail and restaurants. We've also added exposure to travel and leisure. We expect travel demand to increase significantly as the vaccine becomes widely distributed, travel restrictions ease and the employment picture improves.

At year end we were overweight the materials sector given strong demand for industrial metals. We initiated a position in Freeport McMoRan which has done well as copper prices are now at seven year highs. Despite strong performance, we see significant room for multiple expansion and believe that demand for copper will strengthen as the economy improves and the growth of electric vehicle production and greater demand for solar panels & wind turbines will remain a tailwind for copper as it is a necessary input for these products.

We increase our weightings to the industrial sector, specifically companies with exposure to aerospace end markets.

It's clear that the consensus opinion is that rates will stay low for longer given Federal Reserve guidance. What we don't think is appreciated is that an economic recovery may lead to healthy demand driven inflation which could likely be accompanied by higher rates on the long end of the yield curve. This view along with the fact that banks will be able to release excess reserves and return capital to shareholders via buybacks & dividends has led us to increase our financial holdings. We added Goldman Sachs given that the outlook for mergers and acquisitions is quite positive. Additionally, we added to property and casualty insurers given a hardening in the underwriting cycle.

We had little exposure to the more defensive pockets of the market: real estate investment trusts (REITs), consumer staples, & utilities.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

EQ/JPMORGAN VALUE OPPORTUNITIES PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,333.60	$5.72

Actual	1,000.00	1,336.10	4.26
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.49	3.69
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.98%, 0.98% and 0.73%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 16.36% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the S&P 500® Index, which returned 18.40% over the same period.

The following commentary describes key factors (such as stock selection and sector allocation decisions) that helped or hurt the Portfolio's performance relative to the S&P 500 Index.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- An underweight allocation to the energy sector and an overweight allocation to the consumer discretionary sector added to results.
- Stock selection in the industrial sector was positive.
- An overweight position in NAVER Corp. added to performance for the period.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Both sector allocation and security selection overall were negative.
- Stock selection in the materials sector was the largest detractor from relative performance. A relative underweight to the sector also detracted.
- The Portfolio was underweight Technology, which outperformed the market. An underweight position in semiconductor equipment maker ASML Holding NV was a notable detractor in the sector. The company is a leader in deep ultraviolet lithography and occupies a critical niche in the semiconductor manufacturing process.
- Relative overweights in Rolls-Royce Holdings plc in the industrials sector and Lloyds Banking Group plc in the financials sector detracted.
- Stock selection was notably weak in the consumer discretionary and health care sectors as well.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 81 days.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,202.20	$4.83
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.75	4.43
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,203.10	4.83
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.75	4.43

Actual	1,000.00	1,203.50	3.45
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.01	3.17
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.87%, 0.87% and 0.62%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

EQ/LARGE CAP GROWTH INDEX PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,256.80	$4.12
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.48	3.69
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,256.70	4.12
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.48	3.69
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,258.40	2.71
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.74	2.42

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.73%, 0.73% and 0.48%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 31.99% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 1000® Growth Index, which returned 38.49% over the same period.

The following commentary describes key factors (such as stock selection and sector allocation decisions) that helped or hurt the Portfolio's performance relative to the Russell 1000 Growth Index.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Security selection in the financials sector was the largest contributor to relative performance for the period.
- Relative underweights in the industrials, health care, real estate and consumer staples sectors all had a positive impact on performance.
- Within health care, underweights to Merck & Co. Inc. and Amgen Inc. were notable contributors.
- Security selection in the industrials and communication services sectors added to performance. Within the industrial sector, overweighting The Boeing Co. was additive.

What hurt performance during the year:

- A large overweight relative to the benchmark in the financials sector was the biggest detractor from performance for the period.
- Stock selection in the consumer discretionary and information technology, as well as allocations to the information technology, detracted from relative performance.
- Specifically, underweighting top performers Apple, Inc., Tesla, Inc. and Amazon.com, Inc. detracted for the period.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 81 days.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Russell 1000® Value Index	2.80	9.74	10.50

* Date of inception 8/26/11.

 The returns of Class IB were calculated using the returns of Class K, adjusted for expenses, for the period from April 14, 2015 through April 30, 2015.

Returns for periods greater than one year are annualized.

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 2.23% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 1000® Value Index, which returned 2.80% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were industrials, health care, information technology, consumer discretionary and communication services.

- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were The Walt Disney Co., Danaher Corp., Comcast Corp., Walmart, Inc. and BlackRock, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted from performance were energy, financials, real estate and utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were Exxon Mobil Corp., Wells Fargo & Co., AT&T, Inc., Chevron Corp. and JPMorgan Chase & Co.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

EQ/LARGE CAP VALUE INDEX PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,222.90	$4.13
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.42	3.76
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,223.80	4.13
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.42	3.76

Actual	1,000.00	1,223.60	2.73
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.68	2.49

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.74%, 0.74% and 0.49%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 5.70% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 1000® Value Index, which returned 2.80% over the same period.

The following commentary describes key factors (such as stock selection and sector allocation decisions) that helped or hurt the Portfolio's performance relative to the Russell 1000 Value Index.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Both sector allocation and security selection were positive for the year.
- The combination of an overweight allocation and stock selection within the information technology sector supported relative returns. Within this sector, overweight positions in Apple, Inc. and Microsoft Corp. bolstered relative performance.
- An underweight position in the energy sector contributed to performance relative to the benchmark. Within this sector, an underweight position in integrated oil and gas company Exxon Mobil Corp. helped relative results.
- An underweight position in the real estate sector and stock selection in the financials and consumer discretionary sectors further boosted relative returns.
- Underweighting shares of telecommunication services provider AT&T, Inc. further supported relative returns.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Security selection in the health care, utilities and consumer staples sectors detracted from relative performance, led by the portfolio's overweight position in power provider FirstEnergy Corp.
- Underweight allocations to the materials and industrials sectors detracted from relative performance.
- Elsewhere, underweighting shares of media conglomerate The Walt Disney Co. weighed on relative returns.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 81 days. This added to performance relative to the benchmark.
- Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. These derivative positions had little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,209.50	$4.72
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.87	4.31
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,209.40	4.72
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.87	4.31

Actual	1,000.00	1,211.40	3.33
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.12	3.05

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.85%, 0.85% and 0.60%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned (1.56)% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the MSCI Emerging Markets (Net Dividends) IndexSM, which returned 18.31% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Korean companies Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd. and SK Hynix, Inc., respectively, a manufacturer of electronic products and a semiconductor company, benefited from rising memory prices. Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co. Ltd., a Taiwanese semiconductor manufacturer, rose on strong foundry demand during the year and expectations that 2021 demand will remain robust. Infosys Ltd., an Indian provider of IT services, benefited from growing confidence that the strong IT service demand experienced in the second half of the fiscal year would continue. Shares of Baidu, Inc., a Chinese online search engine, rose as the Chinese advertising market continued to recover and after the company announced it would increase focus on its autonomous driving software.

- Security selection within the utilities sector and within Taiwan, Mexico, and Russia added value.
- A lower-than-benchmark exposure to the communication services and real estate sectors, and a higher-than-benchmark exposure to the information technology sector and to Korea, helped relative performance.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Security selection within the communication services, information technology, financials, energy, industrials, consumer discretionary, health care, and materials sectors hurt relative performance.
- Security selection within China, Korea, and Brazil also detracted from returns.
- A lower-than-benchmark exposure to the consumer discretionary sector and to China and Taiwan, and a higher-than-benchmark exposure to the financials sector and to Russia and Indonesia, hurt relative performance.
- Shares of Banco do Brasil SA, a Brazilian bank, were hurt by declining lending rates and falling net interest margins and the expectation for deteriorating credit trends in Brazil. Shares of IRB Brasil Resseguros SA, a Brazilian reinsurance company, were weaker after the regulator announced its intention to carry out a special inspection regarding the coverage of technical provisions due to the recent weakness in the real. Shares of CNOOC Ltd., a Chinese energy company, declined on the back of lower oil prices due to the COVID-19 crisis, and due to concerns that they would be on the list of companies included in an executive order signed by President Trump that barred U.S. investors from investing in companies with links to the Chinese military. CCR SA, a Brazilian toll-road operator, underperformed as it was expected to experience declines in traffic volumes as a result of COVID-19. Tupras Turkiye Petrol Rafinerileri A/S, a Turkish oil refining company, was negatively affected by the COVID-19 pandemic and experienced meaningful declines in demand for its products, which also resulted in lower refining margins.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Lazard Asset Management

We expect that emerging markets economies will benefit further as the vaccine is distributed in developed markets during the first half of 2021 and in emerging markets later in 2021 and 2022. So far there has not been strong reasons to raise interest rates given low inflationary pressure. However, if economic growth is very strong, interest rates may be adjusted higher. We believe these factors, along with a less strong U.S. dollar, bode well for value companies, in particular.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,264.30	$7.76
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,018.28	6.91

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.36%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 1.58% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Legg Mason Growth Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Year Corporate Bond Index, which returned 14.19%, 18.40% and 9.75%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- On an absolute basis, all holdings had positive returns over the period, led by U.S. small cap equities, U.S. large cap equities, and U.S. mid cap equities.
- On a relative basis, U.S. large cap equities and U.S. small cap equities contributed as they outperformed the broader MSCI World Index.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Sub-asset class selection overall detracted from relative returns as international developed equities and U.S. mid cap equities underperformed the broader equity market.
- The systematic de-risking of the Portfolio by selling equity index futures was the primary detractor over the period.

How derivatives contributed/detracted from performance during the quarter:

- The Portfolio can sell equity futures as a method of managing risk. Overall, the short futures positions detracted from returns, as the equity markets continued to rise.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — QS Investors, LLC

We retain a positive outlook towards risk assets as we move into 2021, although our optimism is tempered by short-term uncertainties including the continued threat of COVID-19, trade tensions and deep political divisions in the United States.

Within developed-market equities we maintain a preference for those of the United States, although this view could change if the current sector rotation continues. We also prefer attractively valued cyclical economies, such as the United Kingdom and Japan, which should benefit from global economic recovery. We are less optimistic on Europe, given the constraints on further stimulus from the European Central Bank. China remains our preferred emerging market, although this may change should it become apparent that growth in the Chinese economy has begun to plateau.

We view the recent steepening of the U.S. Treasury yield curve as a correction rather than a trend, and judge equities to be better value than bonds, the valuations of which remain stretched, in our analysis. Within developed market government-issued debt, we prefer European bonds, which have received further support from the European Central Bank. We also see Japanese government bonds as a good defensive Portfolio diversifier.

We remain optimistic on emerging market debt, particularly local-currency issues, which benefit from more attractive valuations and the generalized weakness of the U.S. dollar. Elsewhere, we see alternatives such as commodities and Treasury-inflation-protected securities (TIPS) as important diversifiers and a hedge against the potential for rising inflation.

* Modified duration is a measure of the price sensitivity of the Portfolio to interest rate movements, taking into account specific features of the securities in which it invests.

A credit rating is an assessment provided by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization (NRSRO) of the creditworthiness of an issuer with respect to debt obligations, including specific securities, money market instruments or other debts. Ratings are measured on a scale that generally ranges from AAA (highest) to D (lowest); ratings are subject to change without notice.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,138.30	$6.16
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.38	5.82
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,139.80	4.80
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.65	4.53
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.15% and 0.89%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 2.85% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Legg Mason Moderate Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 11.37%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- On an absolute basis, all asset classes had positive returns over the period, led by U.S. large cap equities, U.S. small cap equities, and international equities.
- The underweight allocations to intermediate term bonds contributed on a relative basis.

What hurt performance during the year:

- On a relative basis, the underweight allocation to U.S. large cap equity, U.S. mid cap equity, and U.S. small cap equity as a result of the risk management features were the largest detractors.
- The systematic de-risking of the portfolio by selling equity index futures detracted strongly over the period, as equity markets continued to rise.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio can sell equity futures as a method of managing risk. Overall, the short futures positions detracted from returns, as the equity markets continued to rise.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — QS Investors, LLC

We retain a positive outlook towards risk assets as we move into 2021, although our optimism is tempered by short-term uncertainties including the continued threat of COVID-19, trade tensions and deep political divisions in the United States.

Within developed-market equities we maintain a preference for those of the United States, although this view could change if the current sector rotation continues. We also prefer attractively valued cyclical economies, such as the United Kingdom and Japan, which should benefit from global economic recovery. We are less optimistic on Europe, given the constraints on further stimulus from the European Central Bank. China remains our preferred emerging market, although this may change should it become apparent that growth in the Chinese economy has begun to plateau.

We view the recent steepening of the U.S. Treasury yield curve as a correction rather than a trend, and judge equities to be better value than bonds, the valuations of which remain stretched, in our analysis. Within developed market government-issued debt, we prefer European bonds, which have received further support from the European Central Bank. We also see Japanese government bonds as a good defensive portfolio diversifier.

EQ/LEGG MASON MODERATE ALLOCATION PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

We remain optimistic on emerging market debt, particularly local-currency issues, which benefit from more attractive valuations and the generalized weakness of the U.S. dollar. Elsewhere, we see alternatives such as commodities and Treasury-inflation-protected securities (TIPS) as important diversifiers and a hedge against the potential for rising inflation.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20

Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.24	5.95
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.17%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 30.86% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 3000® Growth Index, which returned 38.26% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the industrials, consumer staples, financials, and communication services sectors, as well as the allocation to the industrials and consumer discretionary sectors, contributed positively to relative return.

- Amazon.com, Inc., NVIDIA Corp., Autodesk, Inc., Workday, Inc. and Facebook, Inc. were the top contributors to performance. We highlight Amazon, NVIDIA, and Autodesk, below.
- Online retailer Amazon offers millions of products – sold by Amazon or by third parties – with the value proposition to consumers of selection, price, and convenience. Amazon's enterprise IT business, Amazon Web Services (AWS), offers a suite of secure, on-demand cloud-computing services, with a value proposition to clients of speed, agility, and savings. In both of its core markets, we believe Amazon possesses strong and sustainable competitive advantages that would be difficult for competitors to replicate. During the period, we estimate Amazon's gross merchandise volume grew faster than either global retail sales or U.S. e-commerce, indicating the company expanded its market share. AWS also posted strong revenue growth that was well above our estimate of growth in global enterprise-IT spending. Revenue growth during the period exceeded consensus expectations and accelerated following the outbreak of COVID-19. We believe Amazon is one of the best-positioned companies in e-commerce and enterprise IT – in each case addressing large, underpenetrated markets that benefit from secular growth that is still in its early stages.
- NVIDIA is the world leader in graphic processing units (GPUs), which enable computers to produce and utilize highly realistic 3D graphic imagery and models. We believe the company's competitive advantages include its intellectual property, brands, and a large and growing ecosystem of developers and applications utilizing GPU technology. NVIDIA reported better-than-expected results, driven by recovery in its gaming business and rising demand in its data center business. In gaming, NVIDIA is benefiting from the roll out of Turing, its newest GPU architecture, which is becoming the industry norm for the latest blockbuster titles. Data center revenue also rebounded after a period of softness with quarterly data center revenue exceeding $1 billion for the first time in each of the past three quarters. The company saw strong traction for its latest architecture, Ampere, which for the first time enables clients to address both training and inferencing through a single architecture, with performance that surpasses its already leading T4 inferencing and V100 training products.
- A global leader in 3D design software and services, the Autodesk name is synonymous with computer-aided design – a degree of brand recognition that takes years, if not decades, to develop. The company offers a broad suite of products that are viewed as mission critical among its clients and create high switching costs for its global installed user base. In early 2016, the company began transitioning its business model from an up-front, licensing-plus-maintenance model to a cloud-delivered, subscription-based model where fees are recognized ratably over the life of the customer relationship. During the year, Autodesk reported strong results that exceeded consensus expectations for revenues, billings, earnings, and free cash flow. Importantly, Autodesk demonstrated continued progress in its model transition, which is now largely complete, including recurring revenue that grew to 95% of the revenue mix from approximately 50% prior to the transition.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the consumer discretionary, information technology, energy, and health care sectors, as well as the allocations to the information technology, financials, energy, consumer staples, communication services, and health care sectors, detracted from relative performance.
- Under Armour, Inc., Schlumberger Ltd., The Coca-Cola Company, Danone SA, and SEI Investments Co. were the lowest contributors during the period. We highlight Under Armour, Schlumberger, and Coca-Cola, below.
- Under Armour is a leading provider of performance-centric, branded sportswear and footwear. In twenty years, Under Armour has become a credible number three global sportswear brand behind Nike and adidas. We believe the company's strong and sustainable competitive advantages include its brand, distribution, and the benefits of scale needed to compete globally. Under Armour reported weak financial results that reflected the temporary closure of as much as 80% of its points of sale through mid-May due to COVID-19. While we expect this near-term weakness to continue, we do not believe the company or the industry will be structurally impacted in the long term. In China, the company's largest market outside the U.S. and the country which first experienced the impact of COVID-19, stores were closed earlier than in the U.S. and Europe, and results have begun to improve with their re-opening in late March. Further, Under Armour's more-recent results have begun to reflect the benefits of the company's multi-year restructuring.
- Schlumberger is the world's leading supplier of technology, equipment, project management, and information solutions to the oil and gas exploration and production (E&P) industry. Schlumberger reported financial results that deteriorated substantially due to the oil price environment. Following record oil price declines in the first quarter due to COVID-19-related demand weakness in China and a price war between OPEC and Russia, demand and prices fell further in the second quarter as a result of the global lockdown, and continued travel restrictions and a resurgence of COVID-19 cases continues to delay a recovery in demand. As a result, global service activity in 2020 is now expected to decline by 25% to 30% year over year. Given the ongoing uncertainty, Schlumberger has taken prudent steps to increase liquidity, including cutting its dividend, raising cash by issuing debt, and cutting headcount, while lowering structural costs and capital intensity that should contribute to improved returns. Secular growth in the long-term global demand for oil, arising primarily from the need to replace naturally depleting reserves, is driving the need to extract hydrocarbons from harsher environments that are increasingly difficult to reach or extract from. Because oilfield services companies are key to making difficult-to-reach resources more accessible, we believe services like those Schlumberger provides are essential to profitably meeting long-term demand.

- The Coca-Cola Company is the world's leading owner and marketer of non-alcoholic beverage brands and employs an unrivaled global beverage distribution network. We believe Coca-Cola's strong and sustainable competitive advantages include its iconic global brands, difficult-to-replicate beverage distribution network, and unmatched scale. With emerging markets accounting for over 60% of the company's sales by volume, we believed Coca-Cola was well positioned to benefit from long-term secular growth in emerging market spending on non-alcoholic ready-to-drink beverages, driven by both urbanization and growth in disposable income. We believed the sustainability of the company's cash flow growth drivers and the positive impact of the refranchising of its bottling operations had been underappreciated by the market. In late January, the company reported strong financial results which surpassed management's already-increased guidance, and the company recorded its 10th consecutive quarter of mid-single-digit organic revenue growth. We believed these results demonstrated the company's renewed focus on innovation and brand building following the nearly completed refranchising of its bottling operations. The refranchising culminated a decade-long effort to restructure the company's largest bottling partners to meet best-in-class operational standards and position them for sustainable long-term growth. That effort was largely completed in 2017 and is being reflected in the company's improved execution and returns. While management expected its strong growth to continue, the current level of growth exceeded our long-term forecasts. We exited our position in March to reallocate capital to more attractive reward-to-risk opportunities. Due to the timing of the sale in the March downturn, the company is among the biggest detractors for the period.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Loomis, Sayles & Company L.P.

Our investment process is characterized by bottom-up, fundamental research and a long-term investment time horizon. The nature of the process leads to a lower turnover portfolio where sector positioning is the result of stock selection. As of December 31, 2020, we were overweight in the industrials, communication services, financials, consumer discretionary, consumer staples, energy, and health care sectors and underweight in the information technology sector. We had no exposure to stocks in the real estate, materials or utilities sectors. We remain committed to our long-term investment approach to invest in those few high-quality businesses with sustainable competitive advantages and profitable growth when they trade at a significant discount to intrinsic value.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

Returns for periods greater than one year are annualized.

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 15.41% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the MSCI ACWI ex U.S. Growth (Net) Index, which returned 22.20% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- An underweight position in the energy sector contributed to performance relative to the benchmark. Within this sector, an underweight position in integrated oil and gas company Exxon Mobil Corp. helped relative results.
- The combination of an overweight allocation and stock selection within the information technology sector also supported relative returns. Within this sector, an overweight position in semiconductor company Texas Instruments, Inc., holdings of IT servicing firm Accenture plc (not a benchmark holding) and not owning shares of network equipment company Cisco Systems, Inc. bolstered relative performance.
- An underweight position in the real estate sector and stock selection in the financials sector further boosted relative returns. While there were no individual stocks within the real estate sector that were among the Portfolio's largest relative contributors during the period, within the financials sector, not owning shares of financial services firm Bank of America Corp. contributed in relative terms.
- Stocks in other sectors that aided relative performance included overweight positions in life sciences supply company Thermo Fisher Scientific, Inc., health care equipment manufacturer Danaher Corp., building and airplane controls manufacturer Honeywell International, Inc. and consumer credit reporting agency Equifax, Inc. Additionally, not owning shares of telecommunication services provider AT&T, Inc. further supported relative returns.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Security selection in the utilities sector detracted from relative performance, led by the Portfolio's overweight positions in both power provider FirstEnergy Corp. and energy products and services supplier Dominion Energy, Inc.
- An underweight allocation to the consumer discretionary sector also weakened relative results. However, there were no individual stocks within this sector that were among the Portfolio's largest relative detractors during the period.
- Stock selection in the consumer staples sector held back relative performance. Here, not owning shares of retail giant Walmart, Inc. and an underweight position in shares of household products maker The Procter & Gamble Co. at the beginning of the year and not owning it for the balance of the year dampened relative results.

EQ/MFS INTERNATIONAL GROWTH PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

- Elsewhere, the Portfolio's position in integrated energy company Suncor Energy, Inc. and not owning shares of media conglomerate The Walt Disney Co. weighed on relative returns. Additionally, overweight positions in financial services firms Citigroup, Inc. and US Bancorp, and the timing of the Portfolio's ownership in shares of global security company Northrop Grumman Corp. and semiconductor company Intel Corp., further detracted from relative performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,216.60	$6.41
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.35	5.84
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,216.10	6.41
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.35	5.84
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,216.00	5.01
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.61	4.57

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.15%, 1.15% and 0.90%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE RESULTS

Annualized Total Returns as of 12/31/20

	1 Year	Since Incept.
Portfolio – Class IB Shares*	20.03%	18.24%
MSCI EAFE® Index	7.82	9.75
MSCI EAFE® Value (Net) Index†	(2.63)	2.15

* Date of inception 10/22/18.

† In 2020, the MSCI EAFE® Index replaced the MSCI EAFE® Value (Net) Index as the Portfolio's performance benchmark. The Adviser believes that the MSCI EAFE® Index provides a better performance comparison for investors.

Returns for periods greater than one year are annualized.

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 20.03% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the MSCI EAFE® Index and the MSCI EAFE® Value (Net) Index, which returned 7.82% and (2.63)%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Stock selection and an overweight position in both the information technology and consumer staples sectors lifted performance relative to the benchmark. Within the information technology sector, holding shares of integrated circuits and electronic devices developer Cadence Design Systems, Inc., semiconductor firm Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Co. Ltd. (Taiwan), simulation software developer ANSYS, Inc. and microchip and electronics manufacturer Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd. (South Korea) benefited relative returns as all four stocks outperformed the benchmark over the reporting period. Within the consumer staples sector, holding shares of strong-performing global food company Nestle SA (Switzerland) and cosmetics and beauty products company L'Oréal SA (France) both supported relative results.

- Security selection in the industrials sector also contributed positively to relative performance. Here, the Portfolio's overweight position in electrical distribution equipment manufacturer Schneider Electric SE (France) added to relative returns.
- An underweight position in the poor-performing energy sector further supported relative results, led by not holding shares of global energy and petrochemicals company Royal Dutch Shell plc (United Kingdom), which declined over the reporting period.
- Elsewhere, the Portfolio's holdings of fragrance and flavor products manufacturer Givaudan SA (Switzerland) and not holding shares of banking and financial services company HSBC Holdings plc (United Kingdom) also benefited relative returns.

What hurt performance during the year:

- An underweight position and, to a lesser extent, stock selection in the consumer discretionary sector detracted from relative performance over the reporting period. Here, the Portfolio's holdings of food catering company Compass Group plc (United Kingdom) and not holding shares of car maker Toyota Motor Corp. (Japan) both held back relative returns.
- Not holding any stocks within the utilities sector also weakened relative results. Notably, not holding shares of electric utility company Iberdrola SA, which was held by the benchmark, hindered relative returns as the stock rose over the reporting period.
- Stocks in other sectors that further weighed on relative performance included not holding shares of strong-performing technology investment firm SoftBank Corp. (Japan), mining giant BHP Billiton (United Kingdom), mining operator Rio Tinto Ltd. (Australia), electronics and electrical engineering company Siemens (Germany), electricity and gas distributor Enel SpA (Italy) and iron ore deposit developer Fortescue Metals Group Ltd. (Australia).

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,195.20	$6.34
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.36	5.83

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.15%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE RESULTS

Annualized Total Returns as of 12/31/20

	1 Year	Since Incept.
Portfolio – Class IB Shares*	29.76%	24.23%
Russell Midcap® Growth Index	35.59	27.25

* Date of inception 10/22/18.

Returns for periods greater than one year are annualized.

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 29.76% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell Midcap® Growth Index, which returned 35.59% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the financials sector contributed to relative performance, led by an overweight position in index data provider MSCI, Inc.
- Elsewhere, the Portfolio's overweight positions in electronic devices developer Cadence Design Systems, Inc., diversified industrial product manufacturer Monolithic Power Systems, Inc., software developer Take-Two Interactive Software, Inc., dating products provider Match Group, Inc., global medical technology company Masimo Corp. and diversified internet and media company IAC/InterActiveCorp supported relative results. In addition, the Portfolio's holdings of software services provider Autodesk, Inc. and data recording products provider Nice Ltd. (Israel) helped relative results. Avoiding shares of poor-performing hotel and gaming operator Hilton Group further supported relative performance.

What hurt performance during the year:

- A combination of stock selection and an underweight allocation to the information technology sector detracted from performance relative to the benchmark. Here, an overweight position in financial technology services provider Fiserv, Inc. and not owning both strong-performing communication software services provider Twilio, Inc. and advertising technology platform operator The Trade Desk, Inc. held back relative returns.
- Stock selection in the health care sector detracted from relative performance. Here, the timing of the Portfolio's ownership in shares of medical device manufacturing company DexCom, Inc. and not owning strong-performing biotechnology company Moderna, Inc. hurt relative results.
- Stock selection and, to a lesser extent, an underweight allocation to the consumer discretionary sector hurt relative results. Here, the Portfolio's overweight holdings of education services provider Bright Horizons Family Solutions, Inc. and pizza delivery company Domino's Pizza, Inc. also weighed on relative results.
- Elsewhere, an overweight position in construction materials company Vulcan Materials Co., not owning streaming platform services provider Roku, Inc. and the holdings of diversified financial services provider Wolters Kluwer NV (Netherlands) negatively impacted relative returns.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,260.70	$6.25
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.61	5.58
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.10%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 46.83% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the S&P North American Technology Sector Index and the S&P 500® Index, which returned 45.15% and 18.40%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the software industry benefited performance relative to the benchmark. Within this industry, the Portfolio's overweight positions in computer software company DocuSign, Inc., global enterprise cloud communications and collaboration solutions provider RingCentral, Inc. and cloud-based marketing and sales software platform HubSpot Inc. lifted relative returns. Holding shares of cloud and IT services provider Rakus Co. Ltd. (Japan) also helped relative results.
- Avoiding holdings within the communications equipment industry also contributed to relative performance. Here, not holding shares of Cisco Systems, Inc. supported relative returns as the stock declined over the reporting period.
- Security selection and, to a lesser extent, an overweight position in the internet & direct marketing retail industry further aided relative results. Within this industry, the Portfolio's overweight position in online pet food and products retailer Chewy, Inc. and holdings of luxury fashion online retailer Farfetch Ltd. (United Kingdom) were positive drivers of relative returns.
- Stocks in other industries that supported relative performance included not holding shares of semiconductor company Intel and diversified technology products and services company International Business Machines Corp. (IBM) and holding shares of digital health company Livongo Health, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- An underweight position in the technology hardware storage & peripherals industry weighed on relative performance over the reporting period, led by the Portfolio's underweight position in strong-performing computer and personal electronics maker Apple, Inc.
- Stock selection and an overweight position in the professional services industry also weakened relative returns. However, there were no individual stocks within this industry that were among the Portfolio's top relative detractors over the reporting period.
- Elsewhere, stocks that also negatively impacted relative results included the timing of the Portfolio's ownership in shares of both financial technology services provider Fiserv, Inc. and semiconductor manufacturer Microchip Technology, Inc. Holding shares of poor-performing online and mobile commerce company Alibaba Group Holding Ltd. (China) further hindered relative results. Underweighting shares of cloud-based e-commerce platform operator Shopify Inc. (Canada) and computer graphics processor maker NVIDIA Corp., overweighting shares of electronic payment services company Global Payments, Inc., global provider of banking and payment technologies Fidelity National Information Services, Inc. and software giant Microsoft Corp., and not holding wireless communications software company QUALCOMM, Inc. weighed on relative returns.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,246.90	$6.40
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.44	5.75
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.13%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

† In 2020, the MSCI ACWI Utilities (Net) Index replaced the Dow Jones Global Utilities Index as the Portfolio's performance benchmark. The Adviser believes that the MSCI ACWI Utilities (Net) Index provides a better performance comparison for investors.

Returns for periods greater than one year are annualized.

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 5.55% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the MSCI ACWI Utilities (Net) Index, the Dow Jones Global Utilities Index and the S&P 500® Index, which returned 3.81%, 3.80% and 18.40%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Security selection in the independent power & renewable electricity power industry was a primary factor that contributed to performance relative to the benchmark. Within this industry, the Portfolio's holdings of renewable energy company EDP Renovaveis SA (Portugal) benefited relative returns as the stock outpaced the benchmark over the reporting period.
- Stock selection and an underweight position in the multi-utilities industry also lifted relative results. Here, not holding shares of energy products and services supplier Consolidated Edison, Inc. and gas and electricity provider Centrica plc (United Kingdom), along with the timing of the Portfolio's ownership in shares of diversified energy company DTE Energy Co., aided relative performance.
- The Portfolio's out-of-benchmark exposure to the media industry further helped relative returns. Notably, holding shares of cable services provider Charter Communications, Inc. supported relative performance within this industry.
- Stocks in other industries that contributed to relative results included holding shares of telecommunication services provider Cellnex Telecom SA (Spain), not holding shares of utility company PPL and energy company Hong Kong & China Gas, overweighting shares of utility company PG&E and the Portfolio's underweight position in shares of retail electric services provider Southern Company.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The Portfolio's out-of-benchmark allocation to the oil, gas and consumable fuels industry was a primary detractor from relative performance over the reporting period. Within this industry, the Portfolio's holdings of natural gas and petrochemical products manufacturer and pipeline company Enterprise Products Partners and oil and natural gas pipelines operator Plains All American Pipeline LP weighed on relative results.
- Both an underweight position and stock selection in the electric utilities sector also weakened relative returns. Here, not holding renewable energy solutions provider Orsted A/S (Denmark), underweighting shares of electric utility company Iberdrola SA (Spain) and electricity and gas distributor Enel SpA (Italy) and overweighting shares of power provider First Energy held back relative performance.

EQ/MFS UTILITIES SERIES PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

- Elsewhere, overweight positions in power distribution company CenterPoint Energy, Inc. and electricity provider Vistra Energy Corp., not holding shares of water services provider American Water Works Co., Inc., and holding shares of telecommunications company NOS SGPS SA further weighed on relative results.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,170.30	$5.73
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.86	5.33
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,171.60	4.37
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.11	4.06

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.05% and 0.80%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).
