2020 Market Overview

The global markets in 2020 were shocked by the COVID-19 pandemic and geopolitical uncertainty.

The year started with a positive tone for risk assets, but the COVID-19 virus quickly spread across the globe and sparked a massive risk-off move. Economic activity ground to a standstill and joblessness surged. In late March, the U.S. saw a record number of initial claims as 3.3 million people filed for unemployment benefits. The U.S. Federal Reserve provided significant support by reducing interest rates in March. Falling Treasury yields across the curve — along with lower government bond yields globally — supported a quick turnaround in investor sentiment.

As the year wore on, generally positive market sentiment drove market advances in July and August despite a resurgence in global COVID-19 cases. However, September marked a reversal as market participants grappled with renewed concerns over the pandemic and persistent political impasses regarding additional fiscal stimulus. After November, developments supported a risk-on tone. In Europe, the European Central Bank and the Bank of England announced record quantitative easing and monetary stimulus programs. Furthermore, Europe and the U.K. finally reached a trade deal in the fourth quarter, after a turbulent year of trade negotiations that led to a seesaw in risk sentiment. Finally, the markets reacted positively to the U.S. election results, with Joe Biden's victory perceived as an indicator of more stable internal and external government policies.

Fixed-income Markets

In the bond market, initial fears of the coronavirus outbreak and its economic toll drove unprecedented levels of volatility. However monetary accommodation eased fears, as the Fed cut the policy rate to 0% and pledged to buy as much government-backed debt as needed to bolster the markets for housing and Treasury bonds. Furthermore, it announced it would buy corporate bonds, including the riskiest investment-grade debt, for the first time in its history. In the fourth quarter, a U.S. vaccine rollout and the passage of a second stimulus package combined with Fed actions to drive generally positive returns for bonds, and less of a difference between higher- and lower-quality yields than had been seen earlier.

U.S. Equity Markets

In the equity markets, the first quarter saw the CBOE Volatility Index, which measures near-term stock market volatility, surge to its highest level since the financial crisis. The S&P 500 Index experienced its quickest bear market contraction on record. By the second quarter, the U.S. delivered coordinated fiscal and monetary support enough to offset the estimated initial shock from the pandemic and spillovers to the full economy. This appeared to support U.S. stock market outperformance compared to other faltering regions, with a sharper recovery from the troughs of late March. Towards the end of the second quarter, government measures to contain the virus were gradually lifted in many states, boosting activity and employment.

In the third quarter, U.S. stocks continued their recovery over July and August and kept on recording all-time highs until early September, when valuation concerns spooked market volatility and led to a market sell-off. COVID-19 continued to dominate the markets in the third quarter but the easing of restrictions, coupled with a temporary drop in the number of new cases in the U.S. supported a market recovery in the face of spikes in volatility. At the end of the year, the threat of sharply rising COVID-19 cases in the U.S. was offset by positive vaccine news and an announcement of a stimulus package in late December, which supported the market's positive performance.

International markets

Developed markets, as represented by the MSCI EAFE Index, rallied in 2020, from a U.S. dollar perspective.

For the first quarter, Japan outperformed other Asian nations, while Singapore and Australia suffered from record drawdowns on coronavirus fears. In continental Europe, the economy was viewed as particularly vulnerable to global supply chain disruptions, posing downside risks to growth. Macro data across the European region showed a significant negative impact from disruptions, as export orders sharply declined and the Eurozone March manufacturing levels hit the lowest point since July 2012.

In the second quarter, developed markets advanced sharply amid fiscal and monetary stimulus, combined with the reopening of economies. In continental Europe, Germany outperformed with stronger government support while Italy, Switzerland and Spain lagged. U.K. equities started the year strong, but underperformed the region as the crisis deepened. Australia led strong gains in the Asia/Pacific region. In the third quarter, developed international markets continued their recovery but at a slower pace. As in the U.S. the easing of restrictions and supportive fiscal and monetary policies helped the recovery despite a drop toward the end of the quarter as concerns about a third wave in the developed countries started to arise. The low inflation rate, euro appreciation, and slower recovery signs shown in economic data started to surface toward the second half of the quarter.

Developed markets closed out the year with a rally. Despite the rising numbers of COVID-19 cases in Europe and reports of the newly discovered strain of the virus in the U.K., international equities posted strong performance. Additionally, the Biden victory gave market participants hope for increased trade prospects between the U.S. and its counterparties. As in the U.S., vaccination news also boosted performance in all developed international markets.

NOTES ON PERFORMANCE (Unaudited)

Total Returns

Performance of the EQ Advisors Trust Portfolios (“the Portfolios”) as shown on the following pages compares each Portfolio’s performance to that of a broad-based securities index. Each of the Portfolio’s annualized rates of return is net of investment management fees and expenses of the Portfolio. Rates of return are not representative of the actual return you would receive under your variable life insurance policy or annuity contract. No policyholder or contract holder can invest directly in the Portfolios. Changes in policy values depend not only on the investment performance of the Portfolios, but also on the insurance and administrative charges, applicable sales charges, and the mortality and expense risk charge applicable under a policy. These policy charges effectively reduce the dollar amount of any net gains and increase the dollar amount of any net losses. Each of the Portfolios has a separate investment objective it seeks to achieve by following a separate investment policy. There is no guarantee that these objectives will be attained. The objectives and policies of each Portfolio will affect its return and its risk. Keep in mind that past performance is not an indication of future results.

Growth of $10,000 Investment

The charts shown on the following pages illustrate the total value of an assumed investment in Class IA, Class IB and/or Class K shares of each Portfolio of the EQ Advisors Trust. The periods illustrated are from the inception dates shown, or for a ten year period if the inception date is prior to December 31, 2010, through December 31, 2020. These results assume reinvestment of dividends and capital gains. The total value shown for each Portfolio reflects management fees and operating expenses of the Portfolios and 12b-1 fees which are applicable to Class IB shares. Effective January 1, 2012, 12b-1 fees are applicable to Class IA shares. 12b-1 fees are not applicable to Class K shares. The values have not been adjusted for insurance-related charges and expenses associated with life insurance policies or annuity contracts, which would lower the total values shown. Results should not be considered representative of future gains or losses.

The Benchmarks

Broad-based securities indices are unmanaged and are not subject to fees and expenses typically associated with actively-managed funds. An investment cannot be made directly in a broad-based securities index. Comparisons with these benchmarks, therefore, are of limited use. PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 12.29% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/All Asset Growth Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government/Credit Bond Index, which returned 10.04%, 18.40% and 6.43%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in global stocks, intermediate-term bonds and alternative investments.

Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/All Asset Growth Allocation Portfolio targets an allocation in of 55% in equities, 25% bonds and 20% in alternative investments.

Details by Sector

The primary driver of return among U.S. holdings were underlying funds invested in large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. U.S. small- and mid-sized holdings rallied significantly also, but lagged behind the handful of mega-cap tech companies that dominated the market for most of the year. These returns were possible as the U.S. equity market shrugged off the pandemic, which severely reduced economic activity for a significant portion of the reporting period. Initially, sectors such as large-cap technology thrived because COVID-19 accelerated their businesses. Later in the year, resolution of the U.S. presidential election, as well as positive vaccine news continued a rally in cyclical and more value-oriented names, solidifying a broadening of the market.

Among alternatives, convertibles were also standout performers in the generally positive U.S. stock environment. Silver and gold benefitted from the global crisis, as investors sought a safe harbor amid the turmoil. Other alternative investments provided mixed but positive returns in the Portfolio. The severe drop in oil prices hurt underlying funds invested in oil exploration and production, as well as commodities and natural resources. Domestic REITs were also detractors, as cash flows were hurt by higher unemployment and programs to protect renters from eviction.

In the international stock markets, the Portfolio's equity holdings enjoyed positive gains for the year, with developed markets lagging emerging markets. Around the world, the pandemic triggered monetary easing measures and unusually robust fiscal stimulus initiatives. Due to relatively manageable external liabilities and balances of payments in many countries, along with persistently low inflation, even emerging market countries were able to support their staggering economies.

The Portfolio's holdings in intermediate-term government and corporate bonds also provided positive returns. After the initial crisis and flight to quality, the massive amounts of aid provided by both the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. Corporate bonds rallied for the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly but producing lower gains in the closing months of the year, as the stock market rally broadened out.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,185.30	$2.97
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.42	2.75
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,185.80	2.97
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.42	2.75
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,187.10	1.60
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,023.67	1.48

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.54%, 0.54% and 0.29%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 5.68% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Ultra Conservative Strategy Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 7.18%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in a mixture of portfolios invested in a mixture of U.S. stocks, international stocks and intermediate-term bonds. Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/Ultra Conservative Strategy Portfolio targets an allocation of 10% in equities in various capitalization ranges and 90% in investment-grade bonds.

Details by sector

The Portfolio's return was primarily attributable to its holdings in U.S. equities, especially large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. The U.S. equity market shrugged off a global coronavirus pandemic, COVID-19, that severely reduced economic activity for a significant portion of the reporting period. Initially, sectors such as large-cap technology thrived because COVID-19 accelerated their businesses. Later in the year, resolution of the U.S. presidential election, as well as positive vaccine news continued a rally in cyclical and more value-oriented names, solidifying a broadening of the market.

U.S. small- and mid-sized holdings also contributed attractive returns. These companies rallied significantly, but lagged behind the handful of mega-cap tech companies that dominated the market for most of the year.

In the international stock markets, the Portfolio's equity holdings enjoyed positive gains for the year, with developed markets lagging emerging markets. Around the world, the pandemic triggered monetary easing measures and unusually robust fiscal stimulus initiatives. Due to relatively manageable external liabilities and balances of payments in many countries, along with persistently low inflation, even emerging market countries were able to support their staggering economies.

Finally, the Portfolio's holdings in intermediate-term government and corporate bonds also provided positive returns. After the initial crisis and flight to quality, the massive amounts of aid provided by both the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. Corporate bonds rallied for the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly but producing lower gains in the closing months of the year, as the stock market rally broadened out.

EQ/2000 Managed Volatility Portfolio	2.9
EQ/International Managed Volatility Portfolio	1.5
EQ/400 Managed Volatility Portfolio	0.6

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,021.90	$2.58
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.58	2.58
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.51%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 7.26% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Conservative Strategy Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 7.80%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in a mixture of portfolios invested in a mixture of U.S. stocks, international stocks and intermediate-term bonds. Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/Conservative Strategy Portfolio targets an allocation of 20% in equities in various capitalization ranges and 80% in investment-grade bonds.

Details by Sector

The Portfolio's return was primarily attributable to its holdings in U.S. equities, especially large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. The U.S. equity market shrugged off a global coronavirus pandemic, COVID-19, that severely reduced economic activity for a significant portion of the reporting period. Initially, sectors such as large-cap technology thrived because COVID-19 accelerated their businesses. Later in the year, resolution of the U.S. presidential election, as well as positive vaccine news continued a rally in cyclical and more value-oriented names, solidifying a broadening of the market.

U.S. small- and mid-sized holdings also contributed attractive returns. These companies rallied significantly, but lagged behind the handful of mega-cap tech companies that dominated the market for most of the year.

In the international stock markets, the Portfolio's equity holdings enjoyed positive gains for the year, with developed markets lagging emerging markets. Around the world, the pandemic triggered monetary easing measures and unusually robust fiscal stimulus initiatives. Due to relatively manageable external liabilities and balances of payments in many countries, along with persistently low inflation, even emerging market countries were able to support their staggering economies.

Finally, the Portfolio's holdings in intermediate-term government and corporate bonds also provided positive returns. After the initial crisis and flight to quality, the massive amounts of aid provided by both the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. Corporate bonds rallied for the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly but producing lower gains in the closing months of the year, as the stock market rally broadened out.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 9.93% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Conservative Growth Strategy Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 10.42%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in a mixture of portfolios invested in a mixture of U.S. stocks, international stocks and intermediate-term bonds. Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/Conservative Growth Strategy Portfolio targets an allocation of 40% in equities in various capitalization ranges and 60% in investment-grade bonds.

Details by Sector

The Portfolio's return was primarily attributable to its holdings in U.S. equities, especially large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. The U.S. equity market shrugged off a global coronavirus pandemic, COVID-19, that severely reduced economic activity for a significant portion of the reporting period. Initially, sectors such as large-cap technology thrived because COVID-19 accelerated their businesses. Later in the year, resolution of the U.S. presidential election, as well as positive vaccine news continued a rally in cyclical and more value-oriented names, solidifying a broadening of the market.

U.S. small- and mid-sized holdings also contributed attractive returns. These companies rallied significantly, but lagged behind the handful of mega-cap tech companies that dominated the market for most of the year.

In the international stock markets, the Portfolio's equity holdings enjoyed positive gains for the year, with developed markets lagging emerging markets. Around the world, the pandemic triggered monetary easing measures and unusually robust fiscal stimulus initiatives. Due to relatively manageable external liabilities and balances of payments in many countries, along with persistently low inflation, even emerging market countries were able to support their staggering economies.

Finally, the Portfolio's holdings in intermediate-term government and corporate bonds also provided positive returns. After the initial crisis and flight to quality, the massive amounts of aid provided by both the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. Corporate bonds rallied for the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly but producing lower gains in the closing months of the year, as the stock market rally broadened out.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,097.10	$2.61
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.65	2.52
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.50%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 11.20% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Balanced Strategy Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 11.70%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in a mixture of portfolios invested in a mixture of U.S. stocks, international stocks and intermediate-term bonds. Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/Balanced Strategy Portfolio targets an allocation of 50% in equities in various capitalization ranges and 50% in investment-grade bonds.

Details by Sector

The Portfolio's return was primarily attributable to its holdings in U.S. equities, especially large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. The U.S. equity market shrugged off a global coronavirus pandemic, COVID-19, that severely reduced economic activity for a significant portion of the reporting period. Initially, sectors such as large-cap technology thrived because COVID-19 accelerated their businesses. Later in the year, resolution of the U.S. presidential election, as well as positive vaccine news continued a rally in cyclical and more value-oriented names, solidifying a broadening of the market.

U.S. small- and mid-sized holdings also contributed attractive returns. These companies rallied significantly, but lagged behind the handful of mega-cap tech companies that dominated the market for most of the year.

In the international stock markets, the Portfolio's equity holdings enjoyed positive gains for the year, with developed markets lagging emerging markets. Around the world, the pandemic triggered monetary easing measures and unusually robust fiscal stimulus initiatives. Due to relatively manageable external liabilities and balances of payments in many countries, along with persistently low inflation, even emerging market countries were able to support their staggering economies.

Finally, the Portfolio's holdings in intermediate-term government and corporate bonds also provided positive returns. After the initial crisis and flight to quality, the massive amounts of aid provided by both the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. Corporate bonds rallied for the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly but producing lower gains in the closing months of the year, as the stock market rally broadened out.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,121.30	$2.61
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.68	2.49

Actual	1,000.00	1,121.80	2.61
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.68	2.48
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA and Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.49% and 0.49%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 12.38% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/Moderate Growth Strategy Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 12.75%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in a mixture of portfolios invested in a mixture of U.S. stocks, international stocks and intermediate-term bonds. Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/Moderate Growth Strategy Portfolio targets an allocation of 60% in equities in various capitalization ranges and 40% in investment-grade bonds.

Details by Sector

The Portfolio's return was primarily attributable to its holdings in U.S. equities, especially large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in a mixture of portfolios invested in a mixture of U.S. stocks, international stocks and intermediate-term bonds. Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/Growth Strategy Portfolio targets an allocation of 70% in equities in various capitalization ranges and 30% in investment-grade bonds.

Details by Sector

The Portfolio's return was primarily attributable to its holdings in U.S. equities, especially large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. The U.S. equity market shrugged off a global coronavirus pandemic, COVID-19, that severely reduced economic activity for a significant portion of the reporting period. Initially, sectors such as large-cap technology thrived because COVID-19 accelerated their businesses. Later in the year, resolution of the U.S. presidential election, as well as positive vaccine news continued a rally in cyclical and more value-oriented names, solidifying a broadening of the market.

U.S. small- and mid-sized holdings also contributed attractive returns. These companies rallied significantly, but lagged behind the handful of mega-cap tech companies that dominated the market for most of the year.

In the international stock markets, the Portfolio's equity holdings enjoyed positive gains for the year, with developed markets lagging emerging markets. Around the world, the pandemic triggered monetary easing measures and unusually robust fiscal stimulus initiatives. Due to relatively manageable external liabilities and balances of payments in many countries, along with persistently low inflation, even emerging market countries were able to support their staggering economies.

Finally, the Portfolio's holdings in intermediate-term government and corporate bonds also provided positive returns. After the initial crisis and flight to quality, the massive amounts of aid provided by both the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. Corporate bonds rallied for the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly but producing lower gains in the closing months of the year, as the stock market rally broadened out.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20

Actual	1,000.00	1,172.80	2.65
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.70	2.47

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA and Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.49% and 0.49%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio holds allocations in a mixture of portfolios invested in a mixture of U.S. stocks, international stocks and intermediate-term bonds. Despite a globally disruptive health crisis and economic turmoil, the Portfolio's holdings produced positive gains for the year.

The Portfolio's return is driven by its relative allocation to the asset class performance detailed below; the EQ/Aggressive Growth Strategy Portfolio targets an allocation of 80% in equities in various capitalization ranges and 20% in investment-grade bonds.

Details by Sector

The Portfolio's return was primarily attributable to its holdings in U.S. equities, especially large-cap companies with outsized earnings growth. The U.S. equity market shrugged off a global coronavirus pandemic, COVID-19, that severely reduced economic activity for a significant portion of the reporting period. Initially, sectors such as large-cap technology thrived because COVID-19 accelerated their businesses. Later in the year, resolution of the U.S. presidential election, as well as positive vaccine news continued a rally in cyclical and more value-oriented names, solidifying a broadening of the market.

U.S. small- and mid-sized holdings also contributed attractive returns. These companies rallied significantly, but lagged behind the handful of mega-cap tech companies that dominated the market for most of the year.

In the international stock markets, the Portfolio's equity holdings enjoyed positive gains for the year, with developed markets lagging emerging markets. Around the world, the pandemic triggered monetary easing measures and unusually robust fiscal stimulus initiatives. Due to relatively manageable external liabilities and balances of payments in many countries, along with persistently low inflation, even emerging market countries were able to support their staggering economies.

Finally, the Portfolio's holdings in intermediate-term government and corporate bonds also provided positive returns. After the initial crisis and flight to quality, the massive amounts of aid provided by both the U.S. Federal Reserve and the U.S. Congress resulted in notable stabilization in the second quarter and throughout the rest of 2020. Corporate bonds rallied for the year, bouncing back from their March lows swiftly but producing lower gains in the closing months of the year, as the stock market rally broadened out.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,196.70	$2.69
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.69	2.47
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.49%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year*?

- An allocation to the Alternative Energy sector was the top contributor to the Portfolio's performance.

What hurt performance during the year*?

- The allocation to Oil & Gas Services hurt performance, as the sub-sectors was down about 42.0% for the one year period.
- Allocation to small cap energy also detracted from performance.
- Stock selection within Broad Energy contributed to underperformance, with the diversification among main providers detracting from performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

1290 VT ENERGY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned (1.33)% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the MSCI ACWI Minimum Volatility (Net) Index and the MSCI AC World (Net) Index, which returned 2.69% and 16.25%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year?

- Relative to the Portfolio's minimum volatility benchmark, stock selection in both industrials and health care was beneficial to performance.
- An underweight to the energy sector relative to the MSCI ACWI Index added to performance, as did a slight overweight to the materials sector.

What hurt performance during the year?

- On a regional basis, compared to both of the Portfolio's benchmarks, an overall underweight to domestic equities was a detractor from performance. Within domestic equities, underweighting large-cap equities detracted when compared to both benchmarks, while underweighting both small- and mid-cap equities hurt performance relative to the minimum volatility benchmark.
- Both an overweight to and stock selection within the real estate and financials sectors detracted from performance relative to the minimum volatility benchmark.
- Both an overweight to and stock selection within the information technology and consumer discretionary sectors detracted from performance relative to the MSCI ACWI Index. Additionally, an overweight and stock selection within real estate negatively impacted performance relative to the MSCI ACWI Index.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,139.00	$3.66
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.71	3.46
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,140.60	2.32
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.97	2.19

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.68% and 0.43%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 6.33% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the 1290 VT Moderate Growth Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Year Corporate Bond Index, which returned 13.36%, 18.40% and 9.75%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Having greater exposure to small- and mid-capitalization equities within international markets contributed positive performance versus the composite benchmark.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Volatility management was the largest detractor from relative performance as the Portfolio was partially de-risked during the strong equity market recovery in the second quarter.
- The Portfolio's return lagged that of its composite benchmark due to a comparatively lower weighting in equities.

* Modified duration is a measure of the price sensitivity of the Portfolio to interest rate movements, taking into account specific features of the securities in which it invests.

 Weighted Average Rating has been provided by the Investment Sub-Adviser. A credit rating is an assessment provided by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization (NRSRO) of the creditworthiness of an issuer with respect to debt obligations, including specific securities, money market instruments or other debts. Ratings are measured on a scale that generally ranges from AAA (highest) to D (lowest); ratings are subject to change without notice.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,135.60	$5.57
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.92	5.26
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,137.10	4.24
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.17	4.01

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.04% and 0.79%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year?

- Convertible securities was the top contributor to performance, up over 50% in 2020 as equity markets rebounded from March lows.
- ETF holdings invested in precious and base metals added to performance, with the Portfolio's position in silver and gold ETFs up 45.8% and 22.2%, respectively, in the past 12 months.

What hurt performance during the year?

- Multi-strategy exposure was the top detractor from performance, mostly driven by the underperformance by JPMorgan Diversified Alternatives ETF.
- The commodities allocation hurt relative performance. Poor performance was mainly driven by exposure to energy, despite the strong recovery in commodity prices that took place from the end of April.
- Global real estate investment trusts (REITs) detracted from performance, with domestic REITs down over 8% for the period.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 39.08% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the ICE BofA U.S. Convertible Index, which returned 46.22% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The Portfolio was well served by its underweight to the energy and utilities sectors, the two worst performing sectors in the benchmark for the year.
- Favorable security selection in the technology sector was also a significant contributor to results for the year. Notably, a triple-digit return from Square, Inc. and a strong double-digit return from Microchip Technology, Inc. drove results. An overweight to the strongly performing sector also added value.
- Elsewhere, the Portfolio benefited from an underweight to the underperforming financials sector and favorable security selection in the telecommunications sector.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Holding back results in every quarter in 2020, the Portfolio was hampered by a lack of exposure to the three strongly performing Tesla, Inc. issues within the consumer discretionary sector. All issues gained more than 650% for the year and contributed to one-third of the total return of the benchmark. The Portfolio's avoidance of the issues weighed heavily on results, detracting almost 12% of relative performance.
- A lack of exposure to five Zillow Group, Inc. issues held back results in the media sector.
- Underperformance in the consumer staples sector was attributable to a disappointing return from a position in Luckin Coffee, Inc., which fell sharply before being halted from trading due to allegations of fabricated sales. The position was eliminated when the company began trading again in the second quarter of the year.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Palisade Capital Management, L.L.C.

We remain cautiously optimistic that we could see further gains this year, but with pockets of volatility as we continue to wrestle with what a new "normal" economy will look like. On the positive side, we believe the vaccine rollout, stimulus spending, and a dovish Federal Reserve stance may help the economy continue to bounce back as we progress into 2021. Offsetting this, issues such as the impact of near-term COVID-19 shutdowns and an uncertain China trade policy may continue to drag on sentiment. Equity valuation multiples remain elevated, leaving less margin for error. Investor bullish sentiment, while not at extreme levels, still remains higher than usual. As is often the case though, and as was made very apparent in 2020, it may not be what we can forecast and analyze that will drive performance, but rather how well we are prepared for unforeseen events that can prove to be critical. We continue to believe the hybrid nature of convertibles, with their ability to participate in upside appreciation while providing downside protection for unexpected scenarios, can provide investors with an important allocation option. We believe technology and health care may have enduring relevance to investors, even more so in a post-pandemic world. Other sectors which could benefit from an accelerating recovery and whose presence in the convertible universe has grown, such as consumer discretionary, are also an area of increased focus for the portfolio.

1290 VT CONVERTIBLE SECURITIES PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1)

fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — DoubleLine Capital LP

We are cautious in our outlook. The continued public health crisis and rich capital market valuations make value selection and risk management critical. We will continue to exercise diligent risk management and will opportunistically upgrade our portfolios, allocating capital to those sectors and securities which we believe offer the best risk-adjusted return potential. At year end, the Portfolio was positioned with a 45% weight to equities and 55% weight to fixed income securities.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,114.10	$6.14
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.33	5.86
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,114.80	4.83
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.57	4.61

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.16% and 0.91%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 4.26% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Aggregate Bond Index, which returned 7.51% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- U.S. Treasuries were the top performing sector over the period and benefited from the steep drop in yields across all tenors of the U.S. Treasury curve.
- Investment grade corporate credit in the Portfolio also posted strong returns due to its longer duration profile and the Federal Reserve purchase support it received early in the pandemic.

- Exposure to high yield corporate credit during the economic recovery benefited performance as it was the best performing sector over the second half of the year.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The Portfolio's short duration positioning relative to the benchmark detracted from performance as rates ended the year lower across all tenors of the U.S. Treasury curve.
- The Portfolio's overweight to credit exposure relative to the benchmark detracted from performance over the period due to the drop in risk asset prices during the first quarter of 2020.
- Commercial mortgage-back securities (CMBS) and asset-backed securities (ABS) detracted from performance due to their exposure to industries more acutely impacted by COVID-19 such as retail, hospitality, and air travel.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — DoubleLine Capital LP

We note that structured product spreads lagged the recovery of corporate spreads during the second half of 2020 and believe the portfolio is well-positioned to take advantage of outperformance in securitized credit as the global economy continues to recover and COVID-19 vaccines become more widely available. The Federal Reserve has signaled it will continue its accommodative monetary policy of low rates and quantitative easing to support the U.S. economy, which we believe will foster a constructive environment for risk assets. As the U.S. budget deficit continues to reach new all-time highs, we believe that additional fiscal stimulus from the Democratic controlled government combined with Federal Reserve purchase support will lead to higher inflation and put upward pressure on the intermediate to long tenors of the U.S. Treasury Curve. Given this view, we are likely to position the portfolio with a shorter duration than the benchmark.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,031.40	$4.80
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.41	4.77
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,033.90	3.53
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.67	3.51

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.94% and 0.69%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The second largest contributor to the Portfolio's performance, relative to the benchmark, was allocation to and stock selection within the materials sector.
- Portfolio stock selection within the technology sector also contributed to overall performance.
- Leading relative contributors were Lowe's Cos., Inc., Whirlpool Corp., Deere & Co., Corteva, Inc. and UnitedHealth Group, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection within and allocation to the energy sector was the largest relative detractor from performance for the period.
- Relative allocation to and stock selection within the industrials sector diminished some of overall performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,213.60	$5.29
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.36	4.82
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,211.80	5.28
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.36	4.82
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,216.40	3.90
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.62	3.56
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.95%, 0.95% and 0.70%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned (1.33)% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the S&P Long-Only Merger Arbitrage Index and the S&P 500® Index, which returned 4.66% and 18.40%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- With the surge in video game play and streaming music, Sony Corp.'s position as the producer of the PlayStation game console and as a leading record company was an outright quarantine beneficiary and it was up nearly 50% during the year. The company's successful product release of the PlayStation 5 (PS5) and strength in the game & network service industry were key drivers of revenue growth in their diverse product portfolio.

- The Portfolio's higher weighting in industrial companies was one of the largest relative contributors to outperformance during the year. Long-time industrial holding Navistar International Corp.'s announced acquisition by Volkswagen spin-off TRATON was a major contributor to returns as the initial bid of $35/share pre-COVID bid in January 2020 was increased to $43 in September and to $44.50 in November, which was finally accepted by Navistar. The extended period between bids allowed Navistar to show it can weather a massive downturn in truck purchases and has enabled it to showcase many next generation technologies it plans to roll out over the next 3-5 years, potentially making it more valuable.
- The decline in the price of crude oil and performance of energy stocks over the year reinforced the Portfolio's systemic underweight to energy, not as a tactical "sector call", but due to a general avoidance of purely commodity driven businesses. This structural underweighting was the largest relative contributor to the Portfolio's performance during the year.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Over 2/3 of the equities in the Portfolio are invested in small and medium market capitalization stocks. The exposure to smaller stocks was the largest detractor from performance for the full year and the largest contributor to performance during the 4th quarter. Small caps have led the recovery starting from the inflection point of vaccine availability in the fall as the market discounts a more normalized environment during which these companies are poised to benefit.
- The Portfolio's underweighting to technology companies was the largest relative drag on performance during the period for the pre-announced portion of the Portfolio, or companies purchased in anticipation of a potential takeover in the short to medium term. Technology stocks are benefiting from accelerating adoption of digital goods and services as consumers continue to rely on internet infrastructure to perform many of the activities normally reserved for the physical world. How these stocks perform in a full-blown economic recovery and how large they can get, especially when under increasing government scrutiny, remains a question.
- While the Portfolio's allocation to pre-announced deals or companies that are currently the target of acquisitions helped stabilize performance during periods like the 1st quarter when there was significant downside market volatility, it hurt performance for the full year in what was ultimately a strong year for equities.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — GAMCO Asset Management, Inc.

As synchronously as stocks declined at the outset of COVID, the rebound has not been as uniform. Significant valuation disparities remain in the market and economic, political and social changes are as violent as ever. This should lead to greater opportunities for active managers over the coming years. We think greater returns are available looking beyond just the Big Five or index constituents such as Tesla that passive managers will be forced to buy. Finally, we think M&A activity, deferred in some cases but made more urgent in others as buyers and sellers contend with altered competitive landscapes and divergent balance sheet positions, should boom in 2021. Owning consolidation candidates has traditionally allowed us to capture excess returns where we harvest positions regularly at irregular intervals.

As fundamental, bottom-up investors, we continue to seek excellent businesses trading at discounts to Private Market Value with catalysts in place to surface value. Merger & acquisition activity has seen a resurgence in recent months, and financial engineering and even share buybacks are beginning to resume. Despite the market rebound from the March lows, we currently see many opportunities of companies still trading at depressed valuations that should rebound strongly once the economy fully re-opens post-COVID. GAMCO's Private Market Value with a Catalyst™ methodology, supported by deep fundamental research on a wide range of companies, should be particularly well-suited to this environment. We remain disciplined yet adaptable in our approach and long-term with ever-present intensity in our outlook.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 9.51% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 2000® Value Index, which returned 4.63% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Quidel Corp.'s stock more than doubled during the period on very strong demand for its diagnostic tests for COVID-19 within the pandemic environment. Virtual healthcare company, Teladoc, also more than doubled during the period on increased virtual visits. Teladoc Health, Inc. makes most of its revenue from monthly subscription fees, so a recent drop in virtual visits has not been important financially.

- A strategic underweighting in financial companies, which can be viewed as commodities to an extent because of these companies' strong reliance on interest rates, was the largest contributor to the Portfolio's relative outperformance during the period. With rates pinned to nearly zero and demographic, political and productivity trends pointing to decelerating long-term growth, government stimulus-fed inflation seems to be the variable most likely to change. A steeper yield curve would benefit financials while above-expectation inflation favors those with pricing power.
- The decline in the price of crude oil and performance of energy stocks over the year reinforced the Portfolio's systemic underweight to energy, not as a tactical "sector call", but due to a general avoidance of purely commodity driven businesses. This structural underweighting was the largest relative contributor to the Portfolio's performance during the year.

What hurt performance during the year:

- While industrial companies exposed to infrastructure spending (Herc Holdings, Inc.) and "nesting" at home (Graco, Inc.) performed well, those supporting the aerospace and energy sectors, including Portfolio holdings Crane Co. and Kaman Corp. were challenged this year.
- Holdings with exposure to live entertainment, including Ryman Hospitality Properties, Inc. and The Madison Square Garden Co., faced a difficult environment as COVID-19 brought live events and travel to a halt during the year. However, these companies had strong 4th quarter performance as the market began to look beyond the vaccine to a more normalized environment and we believe these companies are poised to continue leading a cyclical rotation higher in 2021 as we get closer to that scenario.
- A lower exposure to technology companies was a detractor to performance during the year. Technology stocks are benefiting from accelerating adoption of digital goods and services as consumers continue to rely on internet infrastructure to perform many of the activities normally reserved for the physical world. How these stocks perform in a full-blown economic recovery and how large they can get, especially when under increasing government scrutiny, remains a question.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — GAMCO Asset Management, Inc.

As synchronously as stocks declined at the outset of COVID, the rebound has not been as uniform. Significant valuation disparities remain in the market and economic, political and social changes are as violent as ever. This should lead to greater opportunities for active managers over the coming years. We think greater returns are available looking beyond just the Big Five or index constituents such as Tesla that passive managers will be forced to buy. Finally, we think M&A activity, deferred in some cases but made more urgent in others as buyers and sellers contend with altered competitive landscapes and divergent balance sheet positions, should boom in 2021. Owning consolidation candidates has traditionally allowed us to capture excess returns where we harvest positions regularly at irregular intervals.

As fundamental, bottom-up investors, we continue to seek excellent businesses trading at discounts to Private Market Value with catalysts in place to surface value. Merger & acquisition activity has seen a resurgence in recent months, and financial engineering and even share buybacks are beginning to resume. Despite the market rebound from the March lows, we currently see many opportunities of companies still trading at depressed valuations that should rebound strongly once the economy fully re-opens post-COVID. GAMCO's Private Market Value with a Catalyst™ methodology, supported by deep fundamental research on a wide range of companies, should be particularly well-suited to this environment. We remain disciplined yet adaptable in our approach and long-term with ever-present intensity in our outlook.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Asset Class Overview

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- From a sector perspective, the Portfolio generated outperformance in the energy sector. Positive security selection was due to the avoidance of defaulting oilfield services companies and increasing exposure to several high conviction energy credits post the market sell-off. The Portfolio also experienced positive security selection in the telecommunications sector, including the avoidance of the large capital structures of Intelsat SA and Frontier Communications Corp., both of which filed for bankruptcy during the year. An overweight exposure to technology and security selection in cable satellite and finance companies also contributed to positive relative performance.

- Security selection in 3-5 year duration bonds added to relative performance.
- For the year in its entirety, positive security selection was a driver of outperformance. The positive security selection occurred primarily within the higher yielding portion of the market, led by both the avoidance of defaulting securities and high returns from several of the Portfolio's higher yielding holdings.

What hurt performance during the year:

- From a sector perspective, security selection within the health care, basic industry and media entertainment sectors detracted from performance. An underweight exposure in the independent sector also detracted.
- Exposure to bank loans, which underperformed bonds during the year, detracted from performance.
- A significant underweight to the longest duration segment of the market, which grew as a percentage of the market due to an increase in downgrades of Investment Grade securities, had a negative impact on relative performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,095.60	$5.27
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.11	5.08
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,095.90	3.95
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.37	3.81

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.00% and 0.75%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Returns for periods greater than one year are annualized.

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 50.22% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell Microcap® Index, which returned 20.96% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Despite historic levels of volatility during the first quarter of 2020, the Portfolio dramatically outperformed its benchmark during the period. The Portfolio's exposure to highly innovative segments of the market such as biotechnology, software, IT services, and ecommerce were the largest contributors to relative performance.

- Within the health care sector, Twist Bioscience Corp., a developer of proprietary DNA manufacturing processes, was the largest contributor to relative performance. Shares of Twist rose as the company's proprietary platform drove scale and product development, while lowering costs for synthetic DNA fragments, which are key for antibody drug discovery.
- The Portfolio's holding in Fiverr International Ltd., a developer of an e-commerce platform, also contributed to relative performance over the period. Fiverr experienced accelerating growth and a pull forward in profitability, as both users and freelancers flocked to the platform during the COVID-19 pandemic, benefiting its share price.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The Portfolio's exposure to industries most impacted by the widespread implementation of social distancing policies, and companies that experienced a decline in operating and price momentum due to the spread of the coronavirus, were the largest detractors from the Portfolio's relative performance.
- Shares of Overstock.com, Inc., which operates an online shopping site, detracted from relative performance during the period. Despite exhibiting solid fundamentals, a combination of rising COVID-19 cases, a lack of fiscal stimulus, and continued political uncertainty was expected to impact consumer spending, which weighed on the share price.
- The Portfolio's position in Gogo Inc., a provider of in-flight wireless services, detracted from relative performance as international and domestic travel was cut severely by major airlines due to the spread of COVID-19.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Lord, Abbett & Co. LLC

Our view of the market remains positive in this seasonally strong time of year. While we are optimistic about equity returns in 2021, we acknowledge the likelihood of increased volatility as rising COVID cases and political uncertainty come back to the forefront. Furthermore, we are keeping our eye on the existing risks and new ones that could arise (i.e. rising interest rates). New market leadership has been evident in smaller cap and alternative energy companies, while value stocks have eliminated the performance differential to growth stocks. Over the latter part of 2020, we adjusted the Portfolio to be more balanced between secular and cyclical growth stocks, which we view as appropriate at this point in the stock market and economic recovery cycle. However, the fundamentals in areas we perceive to be core (information technology, consumer, health care) remain healthy, and we see no reason to make major changes at this point.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,492.30	$7.21
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.35	5.84
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,494.10	5.64
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.61	4.57

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.15% and 0.90%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

1290 VT NATURAL RESOURCES PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,157.30	$4.88
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.61	4.57
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,157.80	3.53
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.87	3.30
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.90% and 0.65%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,154.50	$4.91
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.58	4.60
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,155.40	3.56
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.84	3.34
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.90% and 0.65%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

What helped performance during the year:

- Underweight exposure to the financials sector, as well as stock selection within financials, contributed to relative returns. Within financials, the small position in Galaxy Digital Holdings Ltd., a company focused on digital assets (cryptocurrency) and the blockchain technology sector, rose nearly ten-fold during 2020.

- At the security level, AutoNation, Inc. was the largest contributor to relative returns, as the shares rose over 100% during 2020. After falling during the economic shutdown in late March/early April, AutoNation revenues began to show a revenue recovery soon thereafter. Furthermore, the company rapidly implemented expense control measures, and has a digital presence, including its stake in online auto sales and physical delivery platform Vroom.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The real estate sector was the largest detractor from returns. Within that sector, Howard Hughes Corp. shares fell during the period. The company has some sensitivity to the price of oil due to its assets and tenants in Texas. In addition, some anticipated corporate transactions have failed to come to fruition or to meet investor expectations. However, the quality of the assets held by Howard Hughes Corp. is such that we believe the company retains appreciation potential.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Horizon Asset Management LLC

For some time, we have viewed inflation as the single largest threat facing investors. Recent stimulus efforts by central banks, while necessary, have only exacerbated this concern. We believe that the major indexes are highly exposed to inflation risk, including only low exposure to businesses and sectors that have the potential to benefit in an inflationary environment (such as energy and commodities).

This is a significant theme reflected in our current capital allocations, and as we continue to seek out new investment opportunities, we expect to continue to implement this theme by trying to identify businesses that have the potential to thrive in what we believe will be an inflationary environment. Many of these are asset-light businesses like royalty-streaming companies, such as PrairieSky Royalty Ltd., Sandstorm Gold, Wheaton Precious Metals, and Texas Pacific Land Trust.

We believe that the Portfolio is well positioned for what is to come. While many of our investments are in companies that would likely benefit in an inflationary environment, inflation is not required for them to succeed.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,309.10	$6.68
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.35	5.84
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,309.30	5.22
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.61	4.57

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.15% and 0.90%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

[^] Portfolio turnover rate excludes derivatives, if any.

[†] The amount shown for a share outstanding throughout the period does not accord with the aggregate net income and/or gain on investments for that period because of the timing of sales and repurchases of the Portfolio shares in relation to fluctuating market value of the investments in the Portfolio.

^{##} Includes income resulting from a special dividend. Without this dividend, the per share income amounts would be $0.03 and $0.07 for Class IB and Class K, respectively.

^(e) Net investment income (loss) per share is based on average shares outstanding.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 10.95% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the MSCI World (Net) Index, which returned 15.90% over the same period.

Market Overview

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Our SmartBeta Equity strategy performed in line with our expectations in the past year, with the Portfolio's balance of low volatility and quality exposure helping to provide protection in down markets and participation in up markets.
- With the energy and financials sectors facing significant headwinds, the Portfolio's lower-than-benchmark exposure to several large banks and oil & gas companies featured among the top contributors to returns.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The Portfolio's emphasis on less volatile companies proved strongly beneficial in the first quarter of 2020 when the global coronavirus outbreak led to a steep sell-off, but dragged on returns later in the year as progress towards a vaccine sparked a sharp rally.
- The Portfolio's diversification away from the largest stocks in the index contributes to a below-benchmark weight in mega-cap technology stocks. This positioning weighed on the Portfolio's performance as these firms led the market until late in the year.
- At a stock level, not owning Tesla, Inc. was among the largest detractors from performance as the stock surged in 2020 on rising investor appetite for electric vehicle manufacturers and confirmation that it would be included in the S&P 500 Index.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — AXA Rosenberg Investment Management LLC

After several years of unusually low volatility in global equity markets, the recent market turbulence has reminded many investors of the potential benefits of a more defensive approach to equity investing. In today's highly uncertain environment, the Portfolio's emphasis on reducing volatility and avoiding uncompensated risk could be particularly relevant for many investors. Nonetheless, when considering potentially less volatile investments, a thoughtful approach remains important. In our opinion, a holistic view of defensive equity investing — one that favors less variable earnings, as well as less volatile stock prices — can be an appropriate way to capture the long-term return premium that has traditionally been associated with less risky stocks.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,179.00	$6.01
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.62	5.57
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,180.70	4.64
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.88	4.30

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.10% and 0.85%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

Past performance is not indicative of future results.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 20.01% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the MSCI KLD 400 Social Index and the Russell 1000® Growth Index, which returned 21.11% and 38.49%, respectively.

The following commentary describes key factors (such as stock selection and sector allocation decisions) that helped or hurt the Portfolio's performance relative to the Russell 1000 Growth Index benchmark.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- An underweighting in the health care sector relative to the benchmark contributed to Portfolio performance.
- Avoidance of investment was generally the leading contributor to relative performance for individual holdings, including The Boeing Co., UnitedHealth Group Inc. and Lockheed Martin Corp.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Sector allocation detracted from relative performance in most sectors for the year, with energy, financials, information technology and consumer discretionary being the most notable.
- Stock selection in information technology was the largest relative detractor from performance, led by avoiding investment in Apple, Inc. and investing in Intel Corp., which was not held by the benchmark.
- Stock selection was also a notable relative detractor in the communication services, industrials and health care sectors.
- Not having an investment in Amazon.com, Inc. detracted from relative performance as well.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

We typically use exchange traded equity index futures in our strategies for the purposes of efficient portfolio management. Futures are not used for speculative or leveraged positions in the portfolio and we keep cash to fully cover all outstanding futures positions. Exchange traded futures are employed to equitize dividend accruals as well as to manage day-to-day cash flows generated from clients' trades, dividends, interest received and other activity associated with securities in the portfolio. Specifically, futures contracts are purchased to provide immediate market exposure proportionate to cash accruals and investable cash within the portfolio. While we seek to remain fully invested, a small amount of spendable cash is retained to minimize trading and transactions costs. Skillful cash management and cash equitization are critical to minimizing the potential impact of cash drag and ensure tight tracking to the benchmark.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,214.10	$5.16
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.48	4.71
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,214.10	5.16
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.47	4.71

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA and Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.93% and 0.93%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class K shares returned 16.75% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the S&P 500® Index, which returned 18.40% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were information technology, consumer discretionary, communication services, health care and industrials.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were Apple, Inc., Amazon.com, Inc., Microsoft Corp., NVIDIA Corp. and Facebook, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were energy, financials, real estate and utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were Exxon Mobil Corp., Wells Fargo & Co., AT&T, Inc., The Boeing Co. and Chevron Corp.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 81 days.
- Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class K shares returned 13.46% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the S&P MidCap 400® Index, which returned 13.66% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were information technology, consumer discretionary, health care, industrials and consumer staples.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were Enphase Energy, Inc., SolarEdge Technologies, Inc., Etsy, Inc., Monolithic Power Systems, Inc. and Penn National Gaming, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were real estate, financials, energy, utilities and communication services.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were TransOcean Inc., EPR Properties, Sabre Corp., National Retail Properties, Inc. and Reinsurance Group of America, Inc.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 87 days.
- Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class K
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,294.20	$3.46
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.12	3.05
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.60%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class K shares returned 18.76% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 2000® Index, which returned 19.96% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed to performance were health care, information technology, consumer discretionary, industrials and consumer staples.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were Plug Power, Inc., Teladoc Health, Inc., Penn National Gaming, Inc., Sunrun, Inc. and MyoKardia, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were financials, energy, real estate and utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were Invesco Mortgage Capital, Inc., Intercept Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Novocure Ltd., IBERIABANK Corp. and The Brinks Co.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 83 days.
- Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class K
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,374.30	$3.58
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.12	3.05
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.60%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class K shares returned 6.43% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the International Proxy Index and the MSCI EAFE® Index, which returned 4.79% and 7.82%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were Information Technology, Consumer Discretionary, Health Care, Industrials and Materials.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were ASML Holdings, Softbank, LVMH Moet Hennessy, Sony and Nestle.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted from performance were Energy, Financials, Real Estate, Funds and Investment Trusts and Utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were HSBC, BP, Royal Dutch Shell A Shares, Royal Dutch Shell B Shares and Airbus.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 62 days.

Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class K
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,207.80	$3.84
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.66	3.52
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.69%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 17.01% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the S&P 500® Index, which returned 18.40% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were information technology, consumer discretionary, communication services, health care and industrials.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were Apple, Inc., Amazon.com, Inc., Microsoft Corp., NVIDIA Corp. and Facebook, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were energy, financials, real estate and utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were Exxon Mobil Corp., Wells Fargo & Co., AT&T, Inc., The Boeing Co. and Chevron Corp.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 81 days.
- Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

EQ/500 MANAGED VOLATILITY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,207.80	$4.43
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.13	4.05
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,209.20	3.04
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.38	2.79

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.80% and 0.55%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 13.47% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the S&P MidCap 400® Index, which returned 13.66% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were information technology, consumer discretionary, health care, industrials and consumer staples.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were Enphase Energy, Inc., SolarEdge Technologies, Inc., Etsy, Inc., Monolithic Power Systems, Inc. and Penn National Gaming, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were real estate, financials, energy, utilities and communication services.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were TransOcean Inc., EPR Properties, Sabre Corp., National Retail Properties, Inc. and Reinsurance Group of America, Inc.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 87 days.
- Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

EQ/400 MANAGED VOLATILITY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,294.00	$4.90
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.86	4.32
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,295.60	3.46
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.12	3.05
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.85% and 0.60%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 19.31% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 2000® Index, which returned 19.96% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed to performance were health care, information technology, consumer discretionary, industrials and consumer staples.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were Plug Power, Inc., Teladoc Health, Inc., Penn National Gaming, Inc., Sunrun, Inc. and MyoKardia, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted most from performance were financials, energy, real estate and utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were Invesco Mortgage Capital, Inc., Intercept Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Novocure Ltd., IBERIABANK Corp. and The Brinks Co.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 83 days.
- Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

EQ/2000 MANAGED VOLATILITY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,372.70	$4.93
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.98	4.20
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,374.50	3.45
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.23	2.94

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.83% and 0.58%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The sectors that contributed most to performance were Information Technology, Consumer Discretionary, Health Care, Industrials and Materials.
- The five stocks that contributed most to performance were ASML Holdings, Softbank, LVMH Moet Hennessy, Sony and Nestle.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The sectors that detracted from performance were Energy, Financials, Real Estate, Funds and Investment Trusts and Utilities.
- The five stocks that detracted most from performance were HSBC, BP, Royal Dutch Shell A Shares, Royal Dutch Shell B Shares and Airbus.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 62 days.

Derivatives are used to invest minimal cash balances that have accrued in the account due to the accumulation of dividends and interest received, corporate actions and changes made to the underlying index. As such, the derivative positions have little impact to performance.

EQ/INTERNATIONAL MANAGED VOLATILITY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,207.50	$5.18
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.44	4.75
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,208.80	3.80
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.70	3.48

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.93% and 0.68%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio started the year with a modest overweight to equities which was reduced in January, influenced by the sudden surge in COVID-19 cases outside China. The Portfolio further de-risked to a significant equity underweight as economic closures and quarantines became more extreme—the largest underweight and the fastest 5-day reduction since inception.

Due to heightened market volatility and ongoing concerns around COVID-19, the Portfolio maintained a defensive posture through the second and third quarter of the year. In August, the underweight was eliminated and an overweight position was established by the end of the month. However, with heightened uncertainty from rising COVID-19 cases globally and the anxiety around the U.S. election cycle, the Portfolio reestablished an equity underweight that it carried through the U.S. Presidential election. Supported by continuing stimulus and an improving growth outlook, the Portfolio ended the year overweight equities.

In a robust year for equity returns that followed the rapid recovery off March lows, the underweight equity positioning detracted from performance, specifically in the month of April, as equity markets strongly advanced following the meaningful sell-off in February and March.

What helped performance during the year:

- The U.S. small-cap equity allocation contributed to performance for the year.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The U.S. bonds position detracted from performance for the year.
- An underweight position in U.S. large cap equity was a drag on performance.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

During the period, the Portfolio utilized derivatives for hedging and investment purposes in the form of futures and currency forwards. All derivatives performed in line with the manager's expectations over the period.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,158.60	$6.04
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.54	5.65
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.11%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 3.73% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/AB Dynamic Growth Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 13.13%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio started the year with a modest overweight to equities which was reduced in January, influenced by the sudden surge in COVID-19 cases outside China. The Portfolio further de-risked to a significant equity underweight as economic closures and quarantines became more extreme—the largest underweight and the fastest 5-day reduction since inception.

Due to heightened market volatility and ongoing concerns around COVID-19, the Portfolio maintained a defensive posture through the second and third quarter of the year. In August, the underweight was eliminated and an overweight position was established by the end of the month. However, with heightened uncertainty from rising COVID-19 cases globally and the anxiety around the U.S. election cycle, the Portfolio reestablished an equity underweight that it carried through the U.S. Presidential election. Supported by continuing stimulus and an improving growth outlook, the Portfolio ended the year overweight equities.

In a robust year for equity returns that followed the rapid recovery off March lows, the underweight equity positioning detracted from performance, specifically in the month of April, as equity markets strongly advanced following the meaningful sell-off in February and March.

What helped performance during the year:

- The U.S. small-cap equity allocation contributed to performance for the year.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The U.S. bonds position detracted from performance for the year.
- An underweight position in U.S. large cap equity was a drag on performance.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

During the period, the Portfolio utilized derivatives for hedging and investment purposes in the form of futures and currency forwards. All derivatives performed in line with the manager's expectations over the period.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,140.50	$6.26
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.29	5.90
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.16%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 4.43% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/AB Dynamic Moderate Growth Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. Intermediate Government Bond Index, which returned 12.30%, 18.40% and 5.73%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

The Portfolio started the year with a modest overweight to equities which was reduced in January, influenced by the sudden surge in COVID-19 cases outside China. The Portfolio further de-risked to a significant equity underweight as economic closures and quarantines became more extreme—the largest underweight and the fastest 5-day reduction since inception.

Due to heightened market volatility and ongoing concerns around COVID-19, the Portfolio maintained a defensive posture through the second and third quarter of the year. In August, the underweight was eliminated and an overweight position was established by the end of the month. However, with heightened uncertainty from rising COVID-19 cases globally and the anxiety around the U.S. election cycle, the Portfolio reestablished an equity underweight that it carried through the U.S. Presidential election. Supported by continuing stimulus and an improving growth outlook, the Portfolio ended the year overweight equities.

In a robust year for equity returns that followed the rapid recovery off March lows, the underweight equity positioning detracted from performance, specifically in the month of April, as equity markets strongly advanced following the meaningful sell-off in February and March.

What helped performance during the year:

- The U.S. small-cap equity allocation contributed to performance for the year.

What hurt performance during the year:

- The U.S. bonds position detracted from performance for the year.
- An underweight position in U.S. large cap equity was a drag on performance.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

During the period, the Portfolio utilized derivatives for hedging and investment purposes in the form of futures and currency forwards. All derivatives performed in line with the manager's expectations over the period.

 Weighted Average Rating has been provided by the Investment Sub-Adviser. A credit rating is an assessment provided by a nationally recognized statistical rating organization (NRSRO) of the creditworthiness of an issuer with respect to debt obligations, including specific securities, money market instruments or other debts. Ratings are measured on a scale that generally ranges from AAA (highest) to D (lowest); ratings are subject to change without notice.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,121.40	$5.92
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.56	5.63
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 1.11%, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 0.94% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the ICE BofA 1-year U.S. Treasury Note Index, which returned 1.82% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Off-benchmark exposure to investment-grade corporates, collateralized loan obligations, credit risk-transfer securities, agencies and inflation-linked securities added to performance for the period.
- Longer-than-benchmark duration exposure in the one- to four-year parts of the U.S. yield curve aided performance.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Off-benchmark exposure to commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) detracted from performance for the period.
- Shorter-than-benchmark duration exposure in the six-month, four- to five-year and six- to seven-year parts of the U.S. yield curve also detracted.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — AllianceBernstein L.P.

At year end, the Portfolio's duration was modestly short relative to the benchmark. We also had a diversified overweight to credit sectors, including investment-grade corporates, commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) and asset-backed securities (ABS). We reduced our exposure to financials during the quarter, rotating into consumer noncyclicals, which have been impacted by COVID-19 to a lesser extent. We continued to have a modest allocation to inflation-linked securities, as rising cyclical pressures point to high inflation. In the securitized market, we have added to our CMBS position on the margin as yields compensate for fundamental deterioration.

We expect the global economy to rebound strongly in 2021 after a challenging winter battling the pandemic. Highly effective COVID-19 vaccines have led investors to be optimistic that the global economy will power ahead in the new year. However, the slower-than-anticipated rollout of vaccines combined with new and seemingly more contagious mutations of the virus could create headwinds to economic normalization in the coming months.

On January 6, 2021, the yield on the 10-year U.S. Treasury jumped to over 1.0% for the first time since March 2020 on higher U.S. inflation concerns as capital markets reacted to the dramatic outcome for two U.S. Senate seats in Georgia that have been won by the Democratic Party in runoff elections. This will result in the Senate being equally split between Democrats and Republicans, giving incoming Vice President Kamala Harris the decisive vote assuming senators vote by party line. Also, assuming a tie vote for Senate leadership, a Democrat would become the Senate majority leader, giving Democrats significant control of proposing new legislation in concert with the U.S. House of Representatives. Democratic control of Congress should allow President Joe Biden to pursue areas of his policy agenda where there is universal Democrat Party support. Further fiscal stimulus to combat the impact of the pandemic is expected. Corporate tax cuts enacted by the Trump administration are likely to be reversed, along with increased personal income tax rates for the top income brackets, with higher Social Security payroll taxes and capital gains for high-income earners.

EQ/AB SHORT DURATION GOVERNMENT BOND PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

The longer-term outlook is clouded by strong secular trends including populism, protectionism, deglobalization and growing levels of government debt. A flurry of new international trade agreements have recently been announced, but the biggest question is how the Biden administration intends to reset Trump administration trade policy with allies and China. Given the recovery in economic output and improving market sentiment, we have revised our gross domestic product (GDP) forecasts. We now expect that global GDP will rebound by 4.8% in 2021. Our growth assumptions are based on domestic market and emerging market GDP growth rates of 3.6% and 6.6%, respectively.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

EQ/AB SHORT DURATION GOVERNMENT BOND PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,003.30	$4.03
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.11	4.06
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,003.70	2.77
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,022.37	2.80
* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.80% and 0.55%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 36.05% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 2000® Growth Index, which returned 34.63% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The leading contributor to relative performance was stock selection in the information technology sector. An overweight allocation to the sector was also beneficial.

- Within the IT sector, relative overweight positions in Trade Desk Inc., HubSpot Inc., Coupa Software Inc., RingCentral Inc. and Avalara Inc. were top contributors.
- Stock selection also contributed in the consumer staples, health care, consumer discretionary and materials sectors.
- Sector allocation also added in the industrials, communications services and real estate sectors.
- Within the health care sector, overweight positions in Teladoc Health Inc. and iRhythm Technologies Inc. were notable contributors to performance.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Overall, sector allocation detracted from relative performance for the year, most notably an underweight in health care and overweights in financials and energy.
- Stock selection in the financials and real estate sectors was detrimental to performance.
- The stocks that detracted the most from relative performance were underweight positions in Quidel Corp., Myokardia Inc., Plug Power Inc. and Sunrun Inc.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — AllianceBernstein L.P.

The trajectory of the economic recovery may not be linear and can vary from state to state given the resurgence in COVID-19 cases and potential lockdowns during the winter months. That said, the availability of COVID-19 vaccines will help investors lengthen their horizons and focus on the second half of 2021 and beyond. Although absolute valuations for small-cap growth stocks appear elevated, we believe they should be looked at in the context of the historically low interest rates that the Federal Reserve has committed to for the foreseeable future. While many companies have resumed providing earnings and revenue guidance, there remains a high degree of dispersion among sell-side estimates. Despite a surprisingly strong equity market recovery in 2020, we believe there are idiosyncratic stock-specific opportunities across a wide range of sectors.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,355.10	$5.41
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.54	4.64
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,354.80	5.41
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.54	4.64
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,356.50	3.93
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,021.80	3.37

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA, Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 0.91%, 0.91% and 0.66%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 1.32% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell Midcap® Value Index, which returned 4.96% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The Portfolio had a notable underweight in the real estate sector, which positively impacted performance. Stock selection in real estate also contributed moderately.
- Information technology holdings were standout contributors. Stock selection in information technology lifted relative results. Investments in communications equipment companies, such as F5 Networks, Inc., have benefited from the growth in digital communications during 2020.

- An overweight investment in Hologic, Inc. was beneficial, as this medical device company outperformed due to significant sales for its COVID-19 test.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection and an underweight to materials, especially to metals and mining stocks, dampened relative performance.
- Stock selection and an underweight in communication services hindered relative results. The portfolio lacked exposure to a number of interactive media and services companies that were strong performers for the benchmark.
- Comerica, Inc. was a notable detractor in the financials sector. Lower interest rates and increased credit risk from worsening economic conditions in the first half of the year drove this bank stock to underperform.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

The Portfolio buys foreign exchange forward contracts to offset the inherent currency risk of holding foreign securities.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook – American Century Investment Management, Inc.

The Portfolio seeks to invest in companies where we believe the valuation does not reflect the quality and normal earnings power of the company. Our process is based on individual security selection, but broad themes have emerged.

We do not rely on impending catalysts in our process.

Investors wonder if there are impending catalysts that might bring about a long-awaited and lasting shift toward value stocks. We believe value catalysts are embedded in our security selection. Our process involves buying higher-quality companies trading at a discount to fair value. We believe our fundamental analysis leads us to companies that are undervalued for transitory reasons, and their shares will inherently revert at some point. Relying on catalysts can be precarious. When a catalyst becomes recognizable to the market, the corresponding securities may have already become less attractive on a relative risk/reward basis.

Value opportunities in health care. We believe positive long-term demographic trends support demand for companies in the health care sector. We prefer more stable companies such as pharmaceutical distributors and those offering discretionary products and services that are likely to rebound in a post-pandemic economy.

Notable exposure to consumer staples. Companies in the consumer staples sector generally offer strong defensive characteristics. Furthermore, we believe many of our holdings have taken steps to improve operations and strengthen their balance sheets.

Significant exposure to financials. We believe the financials sector offers select higher-quality companies that fit our process. We prefer trust banks and other financials that risk minimal capital as part of their business model. Our exposure to banks focuses on those we think are more likely to manage credit successfully through the ups and downs of the business cycle.

Disruption themes continue in 2021. The pandemic accelerated paradigm-shifting structural trends. For example, dedensification has reshaped the real estate market as millennials migrate from urban cores, boosted by low mortgage interest rates and the acceptance of work-from-home practices. Declining technology costs and growing environmental concerns have created opportunities for utilities to transition power generation from coal and natural gas to renewable sources such as solar and wind. In addition, we believe government entities will support renewables by enacting policies intended to combat global warming. These and other significant themes may create investment opportunities while increasing the importance of fundamental analysis and security selection.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

Asset Class Overview

Global equity markets performed well for the full year, rebounding from the global recession and sell-off caused by the pandemic. Global stock markets declined sharply in early 2020 amid significant volatility as the coronavirus pandemic led to severe global economic disruptions. Global economic activity ground to a halt in the first quarter as countries closed borders, restricted travel and instituted social distancing protocols. Additionally, a price war between Saudi Arabia and Russia drove oil prices to record lows, further straining global financial markets. Following unprecedented fiscal and monetary stimulus by governments and global central banks to support economic activity, financial markets began to recover. Despite historic declines in gross domestic product (GDP) in most global regions during the second quarter of 2020, optimism surrounding the development of a COVID-19 vaccine and better-than-expected economic data supported a sharp rebound by equity markets during the second half of the year.

Looking at U.S. equity performance in that environment, the S&P 500 Index rebounded strongly from the first recession and bear market in a decade to finish the year at record highs. Growth stocks significantly outperformed value, as investors sought companies able to deliver dependable earnings growth. Similarly, large-cap stocks beat more economically sensitive small caps for the year, as larger companies have more arms to their business and avenues to support profitability. U.S. equities generally outperformed other developed markets. Emerging markets stocks also performed well for the year overall despite significant volatility.

In fixed-income markets, global bonds outperformed the U.S. after accounting for currency effects as the dollar weakened. Looking at U.S. investment-grade fixed-income markets, corporate bonds delivered robust returns, aided by the Federal Reserve bond buying and stimulus measures. Treasury bonds also performed well overall as investors sought out safe-haven investments. Those stimulus measures meant yields on cash-equivalent securities were essentially zero for the year.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The first quarter of the year included the first recession and bear market in a decade. The Portfolio's volatility and diversification management helped significantly during the downturn.
- Contributions to return were broad based. For the year, investment-grade bonds contributed the most to absolute returns, followed by U.S. mid- and large-cap equities.

EQ/AMERICAN CENTURY MODERATE GROWTH ALLOCATION PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

What hurt performance during the year:

- Volatility mitigation limited upside. Those volatility mitigation strategies involved an overweight to cash and investment-grade bonds. These positions contributed to positive performance and reduced risk, but limited upside during the dramatic subsequent market rebound.

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

The Portfolio buys foreign exchange forward hedge contracts to offset the inherent currency risks of holding foreign securities. Exposure to derivatives did not have a material effect on performance in the period.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — American Century Investment Management, Inc.

A vaccine and modest fiscal stimulus mean markets are in risk-on mode for now, but growth is likely to be choppy and sentiment vulnerable to any setbacks. Diversification remains the watchword.

While longer-term economic prospects are improving, we think it's important to remind investors that significant potential risks remain. In the first place, with respect to the vaccine, one very real hurdle we have to clear is reaching the required level of herd immunity around 70% of the population. Estimates as to how long that may take range from around mid-2021 to early 2022. Second, we think investors should be cognizant of the potential long-term scarring effects of the recession on labor markets, which may complicate the recovery.

In such periods of pronounced economic uncertainty, we continue to believe in the efficacy and desirability of broad portfolio diversification by asset class and geography. And because we believe volatility is likely to continue, at year end we maintained a modest overweight to cash and underweight to both large-cap U.S. and developed markets non-U.S. equities. We also maintained an overweight allocation in the investment-grade corporate bond allocation. These bonds continue to be supported by Fed buying and strong investor demand for yield.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

EQ/AMERICAN CENTURY MODERATE GROWTH ALLOCATION PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IB
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,107.20	$6.02
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,019.43	5.76
Class K
Actual	1,000.00	1,108.60	4.70
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.68	4.50

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IB and Class K shares annualized expense ratio of 1.14% and 0.89%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 3.94% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the returns of the following benchmarks over the same period: the EQ/AXA Investment Managers Moderate Allocation Index, the S&P 500® Index and the Bloomberg Barclays U.S. 5-10 Year Corporate Bond Index, which returned 13.53%, 18.40% and 9.75%, respectively.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Despite the activation of the Portfolio's Managed Volatility Strategy during some periods of the fourth quarter, the exposure to equity investments was maintained at a high level (around 51% on average) and the Portfolio benefited from their strong return over the period.
- Volatility increased over the first quarter 2020, which resulted in the activation of the Managed Volatility Strategy and a decrease in equity assets down to around 19% mid-march 2020, which limited the Maximum Drawdown at -21% vs -24.4% for the target allocation.
- The Managed Volatility Strategy is only applied on the equity bucket of the Portfolio. As a consequence, the strategy benefited from the strong rebound of the U.S. investment grade corporate bonds over the second quarter.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Even though the equity exposure increased from 18.3% to 55% during the second and third quarters of 2020 as the ex-ante volatility decreased continuously, the strategy did not fully benefit from the sharp equity market rebound, which explains the underperformance of the strategy relative to the target allocation

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — AXA Investment Managers, Inc.

Thanks to a decrease in the ex-ante volatility registered in December, the equity exposure of the strategy at year end was close to its target one (i.e. 55%). We maintain our constructive stance on equities as we continue to believe that recovering economic activity, supportive policy measures, subdued positioning and an ultra-low hurdle rate in other assets should support equity markets.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 2.81% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 1000® Value Index, which returned 2.80% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- The largest contributors to relative performance were stock selection in the information technology, consumer discretionary and energy sectors.
- In information technology, strong stock selection across several industries contributed to relative performance. Notably, selection decisions in IT services (i.e. overweight to Cognizant Technology Solutions Corp.) and communications equipment (i.e. overweight to Cisco Systems, Inc.) proved beneficial. Investment decisions in technology hardware and electrical equipment also boosted relative results, including an overweight to Dell Technologies, Inc. and ownership of Flex Ltd.

- In consumer discretionary, the largest contributor to relative performance was an overweight to General Motors Co. within the automobiles industry. An overweight to the textiles, apparel & luxury goods industry and stock selection in specialty retail also proved advantageous.
- Within the energy sector, having no exposure to benchmark holdings Exxon Mobil Corp. and Chevron Corp. further added to relative performance, as did an overweight position in Pioneer Natural Resources Company.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection in utilities, health care and consumer staples were the largest detractors during the period.
- In utilities, stock selection within the electric utilities industry was the largest detractor from relative performance. Most notably, an overweight position in FirstEnergy Corp., as well as having no exposure to benchmark holding NextEra Energy, Inc., proved costly during the period.
- In health care, stock selection in pharmaceuticals weighed on relative results, including our decision to invest in Bayer AG, a non-benchmark position.
- Lastly, in the consumer staples sector, performance was hindered due to our decision to not invest in the household products industry, as well as due to investment decisions in tobacco and food & staples retailing.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

announced two new strategic collaborations with Merck &Co., Inc. in oncology.

- Shares of semiconductor equipment maker ASML Holding NV surged. The company is a leader in deep ultraviolet lithography and occupies a critical niche in the semiconductor manufacturing process.
- Ultragenyx Pharmaceutical, Inc.'s shares rose. The rare disease specialist reported strong results for its commercial therapies, including its lead candidate, Crysvisa, which is used to treat rare bone diseases.
- Shares of fast-casual restaurant chain Chipotle Mexican Grill, Inc. gained, benefiting from accelerated growth in its digital ordering and delivery channels during the pandemic.

What hurt performance during the year:

- An underweight position and stock choices in the information technology and consumer discretionary sectors detracted from returns.
- An overweight position in the energy sector also hurt relative results.
- Lighter exposure to Apple, Inc. detracted from the Portfolio's results. The iPhone maker's shares soared as the company saw a jump in sales in its wearables and services segment.
- A below-benchmark position in e-commerce giant Amazon.com, Inc. also detracted from the Portfolio's relative returns. Shares gained on the strength of its e-commerce and cloud-computing businesses.
- Shares of oil exploration and production company EOG Resources, Inc. declined on plummeting global demand for petroleum products.
- Lack of exposure to chipmaker NVIDIA Corp. detracted from the Portfolio's relative results. The company benefited from a surge in demand for its graphic processing units used in both data centers and gaming.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — Capital International, Inc.

The global economy is turning the corner toward recovery, fueled by China's economic rebound and fresh stimulus measures around the world, which should help support equity prices in a low interest rate environment. Countries are beginning to roll out vaccines to contain COVID-19, however, growth is likely to be challenged in the first half of 2021 by another wave of virus outbreaks. As more vaccines are administered, global growth could accelerate and help unleash pent-up demand for a number of goods and services.

EQ/CAPITAL GROUP RESEARCH PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

EXAMPLE

	Beginning Account Value 7/1/20	Ending Account Value 12/31/20	Expenses Paid During Period* 7/1/20 - 12/31/20
Class IA
Actual	$1,000.00	$1,226.50	$5.43
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.26	4.93
Class IB
Actual	1,000.00	1,227.00	5.43
Hypothetical (5% average annual return before expenses)	1,000.00	1,020.26	4.93

* Expenses are equal to the Portfolio's Class IA and Class IB shares annualized expense ratio of 0.97% and 0.97%, respectively, multiplied by the average account value over the period, and multiplied by 184/366 (to reflect the one-half year period).

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

The Portfolio's Class IB shares returned 30.85% for the year ended December 31, 2020. This compares to the Portfolio's benchmark, the Russell 1000® Growth Index, which returned 38.49% over the same period.

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the industrials, health care and real estate sectors was the main contributor to relative performance, led by solid gains from United Parcel Service, Inc., which is benefiting from a surge in deliveries from e-commerce; Uber Technologies, Inc., where strength in its food delivery business is offsetting weak rideshare volumes; as well as Thermo Fisher Scientific, Inc., a diversified medical supplier that has been providing testing kits during the COVID-19 pandemic and Alexion Pharmaceuticals, Inc., a biotechnology firm that received an acquisition bid from a larger pharmaceutical rival.

- Microsoft Corp., Apple, Inc., NVIDIA Corp., Adobe, Inc. and QUALCOMM, Inc. were standouts in the IT sector, as they maintain leadership positions in secular growth areas that have been accelerated by the work-from-home and stay-at-home environments.
- Amazon.com, Inc. has also continued to thrive on both the e-commerce and cloud front while Aptiv plc has surged on growing demand for electric vehicles.

What hurt performance during the year:

- Stock selection in the IT sector was the biggest detractor from results, due primarily to underperformance of software stocks Nutanix, Inc., Oracle Corp. and VMware, Inc. and an underweight to the high beta, mega cap momentum names that have led market performance over the last 12 months. We exited Oracle and have seen better recent results from Nutanix.
- Ex-Amazon, the Portfolio's consumer discretionary exposure was also a headwind as Booking Holdings, Inc. was hurt by sharply reduced travel related to the pandemic, Advance Auto Parts, Inc. suffered from weakening comparable store sales due to shelter in place policies while Alibaba Group Holding Ltd. traded off on increasing regulatory scrutiny in its home market of China.
- Stock selection in communication services was also a detractor as normally defensive names Comcast Corp. and The Walt Disney Co. sold off due to the closure of theme parks, live sports and related entertainment activity that have impacted near-term results. Comcast has partially offset its entertainment weakness with strong broadband growth while Disney is seeing improving results from the strong debut of its streaming service.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — ClearBridge Investments, LLC

The Portfolio is constructed to thrive through a full market cycle and deliver strong down capture during turbulent periods. Any year where our very concentrated benchmark is up 38% will likely be a difficult one due to our focus on diversification across three buckets of growth companies. The Portfolio trails the benchmark over an extended period of momentum leadership and one where a handful of mega cap IT and Internet stocks are driving most of the benchmark's performance.

Looking back on the year, we were too conservative in repositioning the Portfolio during the volatility of the first and second quarters. While adding six names and exiting eight others in that span, we weren't active enough in an IT sector that acted much more defensively than expected. We believe valuation concerns have thus far been ignored in the most expensive areas within technology and communications. At year end, we held a balance of secular winners along with healthy exposure to reopening of the economy, post vaccine success.

The desire to promote diversification also prevented us from maintaining a benchmark weight in Apple, Inc., which accounts for 11.6% of the Russell 1000 Growth Index and was up over 80% for the year. Choosing not to own Tesla was also a significant headwind to relative results as the stock skyrocketed more than 700%.

For some time, the Portfolio has been positioned for an environment of low economic growth. That was certainly the case for much of 2020 as the economy suffered through a sharp but brief recession. As we enter the new year, the economy is still down 10 million jobs from its pre-COVID-19 peak and a recent surge in infections has caused jobless claims to move higher again. What's uncertain is whether the economy is hitting a rough patch or headed for a double dip recession. We think the former scenario is more likely as the successful distribution of COVID-19 vaccines, combined with new fiscal stimulus, continued monetary accommodation and a Wall Street-friendly divided Congress, could lead to reasonable gross domestic product (GDP) growth in 2021.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.

PERFORMANCE SUMMARY

Portfolio Highlights

What helped performance during the year:

- Overall both stock selection and sector allocation drove significant outperformance for the period.
- Stock selection in information technology and an overweight to the sector were the primary contributors to results as the Portfolio received positive contributions across a range of software, e-commerce enablement and digital collaboration services companies, with Shopify Inc., DocuSign, Inc., Wix.com Ltd. and Sprout Social, Inc. particular standouts. IT was the second best performing sector in the benchmark and the Portfolio's significant overweight further supported results.

- Stock selection in the health care, industrials, consumer discretionary and consumer staples sectors also drove performance, lifted by medical device maker Insulet Corp., e-commerce platforms Carvana Co. and Mercadolibre, Inc. and Trex Co., Inc., a manufacturer of decking from recycled materials and warehouse retailer BJ's Wholesale Club Holdings, Inc.

What hurt performance during the year:

- An overweight to the real estate sector was a primary detractor, hurt by the Portfolio's exposure to outdoor advertiser Outfront Media, Inc. and commercial real estate manager CBRE Group, Inc.
- Stock selection in the materials sector also negatively impacted results as the Portfolio holding Summit Materials LLC, was hurt by a shutdown of activity during the COVID-19 lockdown period

How did derivatives contribute/detract from performance during the year?

- The Portfolio maintains exposure to exchange-traded index futures, for purposes of liquidity and/or to adjust the Portfolio's equity exposure during periods of high market volatility. The derivatives are typically offset by a roughly equal allocation to cash and cash equivalents, and had a minimal impact on performance relative to the benchmark. The Portfolio reduced its equity exposure at certain points of the year during which volatility was relatively high, de-equitizing by as much as 46% for 81 days.

Portfolio Positioning and Outlook — ClearBridge Investments, LLC

After a year of active repositioning, the Portfolio at year end the Portfolio had more balance than ever before. We have established a wider array of exposures across public and private equity and alternative investments because we believe there will be more breadth in the market going forward. That stands in contrast to early 2020 and prior years when the market was fairly concentrated in high-multiple, secular growth names. The broadening of the Portfolio started in the second quarter as pandemic-related volatility spiked and has been achieved through opportunistic buying of evolving opportunities and mispriced steady compounders like Performance Food Group and Expedia. We partially funded these additions through select profit taking in disruptors that have seen huge moves.

EQ/CLEARBRIDGE SELECT EQUITY MANAGED VOLATILITY PORTFOLIO (Unaudited)

Over the last 12 months, we established more than 50 new positions across equity, convertible and private securities and sold over 30 existing holdings, where valuations had become full, our thesis for owning the company had changed or due to an acquisition. In addition, we made ample use of options to enhance the risk/reward of existing long positions.

Among those new buys, we were active in the initial public offering (IPO) market, both in traditional offerings like food delivery leader DoorDash and special purpose acquisitions companies (SPACs), which in 2020 surpassed traditional IPO issuance for the first time. We looked at a number of SPACs but participated in just a few where we knew the managers very well and expect them to target alluring disruptive businesses.

The global economy appears on a trajectory of improvement with vaccine distribution continuing to ramp up. But as we learned last year, it's the unknowns that can present the most risk. The Portfolio remains flexible and nimble, ready to adjust as new uncertainties arise. We continually assess and reassess the theses for the companies we own to maintain confidence in our exposures as this is the best way to be prepared for exogenous events like COVID-19.

We have been spending a lot of time lately analyzing what the new normal will look like coming out of the pandemic. Some of the major changes in business and consumer behavior during COVID-19 will have durability, not only in work-from-home, e-commerce and cloud computing but also in other areas of our economy such as health care with the increased adoption of telemedicine. We are evaluating what the sustainable trajectory is of some of our businesses given these enduring trends.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR EXPENSES:

As a shareholder of the Portfolio, you incur two types of costs:

(1) transaction costs, including applicable sales charges and redemption fees; and (2) ongoing costs, including investment advisory fees, distribution and/or service (12b-1) fees (in the case of Class IA and Class IB shares of the Portfolio), and other Portfolio expenses. These examples are intended to help you understand your ongoing costs (in dollars) of investing in the Portfolio and to compare these costs with the ongoing costs of investing in other mutual funds.

The examples are based on an investment of $1,000 invested at the beginning of the six-month period ended December 31, 2020 and held for the entire six-month period.

Actual Expenses

The first line of the following table provides information about actual account values and actual expenses. You may use the information in this line, together with the amount you invested, to estimate the expenses that you paid over the period. Simply divide your account value by $1,000 (for example, an $8,600 account value divided by $1,000 = 8.6), then multiply the result by the number in the first line under the heading entitled "Expenses Paid During Period" to estimate the expenses you paid on your account during this period.

Hypothetical Example for Comparison Purposes

The second line of the following table provides information about hypothetical account values and hypothetical expenses based on the Portfolio's actual expense ratio and an assumed rate of return of 5% per year before expenses, which is not the Portfolio's actual return. The hypothetical account values and expenses may not be used to estimate the actual ending account balance or expenses you paid for the period. You may use this information to compare the ongoing costs of investing in the Portfolio and other funds. To do so, compare this 5% hypothetical example with the 5% hypothetical examples that appear in the shareholder reports of the other funds.

Please note that the expenses shown in the table are meant to highlight your ongoing costs only and do not reflect any transactional costs, such as sales charges (loads), redemption fees, or exchange fees. Therefore, the second line of the table is useful in comparing ongoing costs only, and will not help you determine the relative total costs of owning different funds. In addition, if these transactional costs were included, your costs would have been higher. Also note that the table does not reflect any variable life insurance or variable annuity contract-related fees and expenses, which would increase overall fees and expenses.
